SERFOM ENDS

Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, May 18.—Emperor Haile Selassie to-day issued a decree abolishing serfdom throughout Ethiopia and equalizing the system of land taxation.

An announcement said the masses acclaimed the steps and added the abolition of unequal land taxation would advance Ethiopia 1,000 years in civilization.

The abolition of serfdom throughout Ethiopia virtually removes the last vestige of the once flourishing social condition.

Early in the present century an effective control over serfdom in Africa had been established and only in Ethiopia was it countenanced.

Opposition to the abolition of serfdom was led by the League of Nations. In 1925 a League committee elected "to assist one another forthwith in the abolition of the slave trade, slavery and analogous conditions."

For some time after slave-trading had been eliminated it was thought a modest and watered emancipation of slaves in a country like Ethiopia, which had adopted a Christianity based on the law of Pontius Pilate, and in which the institution had become interwoven with the social fabric, would bring ruin and misery to the slaves.

Secondly, a modified form of slavery by which slaves became attached to the households or the land of their masters, supplanted the more ancient form of thrallism within recent years. It was known as "debt peonage."

India newspapers recently urged the intervention of Italy in Ethiopia to the end that slavery still existed and that civilizing influence was needed.

London, May 18 (Canadian Press from Havre).—British statements to day pointed to the hopes for peaceful settlement of the Italian-Ethiopian dispute on the League of Nations in the belief, it was understood, that the matter had reached a stage where settlement by the two countries "is extremely difficult."

Mr. Anthony Eden, Lord Privy Seal, according to news reports to day, said he hoped that Capt. Peter Parker, his political life in his hands. The dispute between Italy and Ethiopia, with which as British representative he will have to deal, is one full of difficulties. A false step at this critical moment in the fight for international security might bring disaster, albeit not merely to himself but to the League.

"If he remains received at Geneva to put his statesmanship to the test, he need not fear for the result nor for the verdict of his countrymen. He has the common people of Britain solidly behind him."

should advise you to take your own little summary statement, or else some of the poems by A. A. Milne, and make up your own actions.

"You are much more capable of making these dances than the people who publish books. You know the children you have to work with, and also the limitations of the space in which you will have to dance. They will help and like it. You will have much more fun that way."

The main objections to many of the old-fashioned stages, games, and the like, were the lack of action, the lack of grouping and pattern making. Patterns, he added, were in all cases to be preferred to straight lines.

Miss Jones replied to Mr. Macfarlane by setting out the socialistic programme of the C.C.F. for the benefit of the average citizen of the country.

Mr. Webber, in his final reply, dealt with the charge made by Mr. Macfarlane that the C.C.F. was participating in the direction of the C.P.C. Mr. Webber declared there was no basis for the charge, and why not, as that was the only way by which better conditions could be brought about. He said they frankly expected it was the dispossessed and the propertied who would enter the C.C.F. He reiterated the suggestion that the C.C.P. was advocating socialism as its

NO DECISION

On Monday Mr. Bennett will resume his place in the Commons and on some date as yet unannounced will consult with his colleagues to decide whether or not it is advisable for him to continue in office and go through a general election campaign or resign himself to a period of rest and recuperation advised by two prominent heart specialists.

The announcement in a news interview with him yesterday, that there would be no immediate decision on whether he would continue as leader of the government was received with deep interest in Ottawa. The impression here had been that a decision would be reached within a week after his return.

NO MILITARY COMMITMENTS

Quebec, May 18.—Canada had given no commitments to the British Government with respect to empire defense, nor had any been asked, Prime Minister R. B. Bennett told newspaper reporters here yesterday. He was en route through on his way to Ottawa after a long absence from England, where he attended the King's Jubilee celebrations.

Mr. Bennett said published reports of empire defence discussions while he was in London had been unfounded and denied gave concern.

"The European situation is difficult," Mr. Bennett said.

"The United Kingdom has continually pursued a policy of peace to the extent of rendering insecure our own position on land, sea and air."

Stevens Heard In Ottawa

British Columbia M.P. Talks of Need of Economic Changes

Canadian Press
Ottawa, May 18.—That every contractor, owner or manager, large or small, must do his best to prevent the "ebb and flow of business from running smoothly" was a statement made by Hon. H. H. Stevens, M.P., former Minister of Trade and Commerce, in an address here yesterday. The surprise was that the statement was not directed at the men who were responsible for the "ebb and flow." The truth is that it was the drivers who took 20 and 25 cents which the driver valued at $75 from him. The men had engaged Stevens to drive them to a certain address on Union Street. They ordered him out at the 110 block at gunpoint, and though he did not resist, struck him.

An "eminent authority" had said the other day 80 per cent of the people were honest, said Mr. Stevens. He himself would not place the people he would find themselves duly faced.

On the point, however, the fact, while the great body of business men were conducting their affairs in an honorable way, yet in every branch there were individuals who operated with a certain disregard for all ethics. And, he added, it had to be remembered that that small percentage often comprised those who occupied a dominating position in various branches of industry.

Mr. Stevens, he asserted, compiled constant revision of standards; and the promotion of ethical standards was no small task. The result of many years of these efforts and the will to practice and enforce them. All things changed. The techniques of sociology and economics which served a generation ago were now out of date. So also were the industrial methods of a few years ago. Concepts of "honesty" were themselves subject to change.

Mr. Stevens was severely critical of the present system of government, as a number of business organizations had heralded the activity of the New York Exchange, fearing the rise in prices. He ventured to say these had been deliberately manipulated by gamblers, and when the "jamb" were encouraged to enter the speculation, they would find themselves duly faced.

British Isles to the Dominions has long been considered. What United Kingdom Government has done is to prohibit exports outside the Empire.

In the face of this, the speaker continued, the British government had spent £1,000,000,000 to meet the needs of unemployed and a mere £10,000,000 in efforts to establish in the Dominions.

CONFERENCES URGED

By emphasizing the need of meetings in different parts of the Empire, gatherings at which each country could state its own views and the others viewpoints, such understanding can put an end to disastrous and ill-advised assisted schemes of immigration, failure of which have had an evil effect. He cited failures of such schemes in Australia.

They sent these people here to British colonies instead of Canada and Australia, he declared.

He drew a picture of the difficulties which face the settlers, particularly those chosen with more goodwill than good sense, in adjusting themselves to conditions in the Dominions.

TRANSPORTATION LINKS

Empire unity could be furthered by closer attention to means of transportation between the units of the British Commonwealth, Sir Stanley declared.

"During these years we have seen the Empire develop, particularly in Canada, Australia and South Africa, and the young people are in their formative years and let them grow up with the habits, traditions and background of the country," he declared. "Then they will become good Canadians, Australians and South Africans."

Sir Stanley declared that, during the past two years, immigration from the

ALL MUST CO-OPERATE

Gainful Occupation Instead of Relief is the Aim of Your Government

IT is the policy of your government that relief recipients shall give services in return wherever possible. Recent refusal of a certain number to do the small amount of work required has jeopardized this policy and embarrassed those who are willing to do their share.

As a result of the actions of these disturbing groups your government has laid down a policy that all relief recipients, physically able to perform work, but who refuse to do so or to give a reasonable day's service, will be considered ineligible for further relief. Where it is necessary, dependents of those men will be allowed relief and the disqualifed relief applicant will be removed from the position of head of the family so far as unemployment administration is concerned. He will only be reinstated when he is prepared to give a reasonable amount of labor in return for his and his dependents' relief.

The policy of your government has been to distribute relief upon a basis of co-operative need, having regard for the number of dependents in a family without regard for the physical fitness of the recipient. Only those physically able are required to undertake labour on public works and then on a basis of one day's work for each $3.20 received.

Work, whenever possible, will be provided within walking distance of workers' homes; where this is not possible, transportation will be provided. Relief workers will not go out in bad weather. As additional public works funds become available, plans will be made to supplement amounts of relief by extra work.

Your government fully realizes that the amount of relief given is only upon a subsistence basis, but is doing its best to improve conditions and bring about a change in policy. At present the problem is to give the greatest possible distribution to the monies available. The money borrowed for unemployment relief and, for public works, plus the annual vote from current revenue for bridge and road maintenance, has been pooled for the purpose of assisting those who find it impossible to obtain employment. It is obvious, therefore, that relief recipients must do their share in the upkeep of roads in return for the allowances made.

Having dealt fairly with relief recipients, your government feels that it should have the reasonable co-operation of the unemployed. Such co-operation will assist in bringing about the improvements which your government desires, namely, that gainful occupations shall be substituted for relief.

Believing that relief exists, in existence when your government took office, were insufficient to prevent suffering where

"I saw a sixtesome reel done in Vancouver three years ago by adults—excellently," said Mr. Jarman, "but nothing like as well as this afternoon."

"I have always been anxious to see boys take up folk dancing," he added. "He manipulated the eight young men on their sporting spirit in invading the dancing section, and also on their wonderful poise and spirit as dancers."

The adjudicator paid special tribute to one of the eight girls who took part in the reel, describing her as "dancing on the floor to which the dancers were accompanied by Pipe Major Donald Cameron."

The adjudicator expressed himself as delighted with the high standard of dancing in all the classes. He laid special stress on the excellent poses of the girls in all dances, stating that the bearing of body and especially of head was of great value outside the dancing floor.

ARION CLUB CUP

The Arion Club Challenge Cup for girls' folk dancing, Danish or Czechoslovakian dances, by girls under eleven years of age, was carried off by the Girls Central School, last year's winners in this class. The team, trained by Miss Eleanor McLeod, scored a total of eighty-eight points for their interpretation of the Czechoslovakian dance, "The Dance of Fire." Sir John Devlin, with the experience, came second, with eighty points. North Ward School, dancing the Swedish folk dance, "Reap the Flax," was third, and Quadra Primary School, Division 1, with a Swedish Klippans, was fourth.

AGAIN VICTORS

Girls Central School also was awarded the Victoria and District Teachers' Association Cup for any English or other folk dancing. Their score was ninety points, with Miss H. A. Bradshaw's Quadra Street School class second with eighty-seven points for their version of "Picking Up Sticks," followed by North Ward School, "Norsouch;" Victoria West School, "The Merry Miller"; and South Park School, "Hercules" and "Berserkis," and Bessborough School, "Gathering Peacock."

The adjudicator explained that the second team would have scored a higher total but for the fact that they had danced "Picking Up Sticks," a very special dance, to a different tune. In stressing the great importance of dancing interpretation in folk dancing, showing how in many cases the music fitted the actions so closely that any change necessarily detracted from the meaning of the piece.

SOUTH PARK WIN

The Sayward Challenge Cup for Irish folk dances was awarded to Miss M. Croft's class from South Park School, dancing an Irish Jig in pretty costumes with alternate red and green skirts and caps. Their score was ninety-one. Gladstone School was third with eighty-four points, interpreting an Irish Lilt. They were followed by North Ward School, with a six-handed reel, a dance which the adjudicator stated that he had never seen before, and thought was better suited to boys, and Quadra School, also with an Irish Lilt.

OAKLANDS SECOND

In the Redbourne Cup class, won by the High School, Oaklands was second, with ninety points, with their interpretation of the Swedish folk dance, "Vatten." The Arion School third with "The Blue Bonnet" and Danish dances on a large scale, and South Park School and North Ward School equal fourth, both dancing the Italian Tarantella, in costume, and North Ward School in costume, and North Ward.

ADJUDICATOR'S COMMENTS

In his comments between the various classes the adjudicator showed his extensive knowledge of the subject of folk dancing, and gave many hints and suggestions on the technique of the art.

He made a day-long visit which he made recently to Prague, where he saw 25,000 men doing physical exercises and folk dances in one solid mass. He hoped that one day such a sight would be seen in Canada.

"I hope the children will keep up the interest after they leave school," he said. "They are not to be done just in school. They are worthwhile in themselves."

He referred to the international value of folk dancing in a nation such as Canada, where the various racial elements could retain their individuality, yet be cemented by a common love of the art.

Some of the points of criticism raised by Mr. Jarman—of which there were not very many—included the need for a light touch with the feet, the time being kept with the body and arms rather than by stamping on the floor; the desirability of opening out the figures of a dance so as to give more room; the need for a more uniform bearing at least as important as the rhythm, and the need for a happy and relaxed facial expression.

Other classes in the folk dancing section of the festival were judged at the High School this morning and afternoon.

Right Victoria High School boys walked rather haphazardly onto the floor of the High School gymnasium yesterday afternoon and set a new precedent for the folk dancing section of the Musical Festival.

The boys, dressed in Canadian Scottish kilts and white tunics and eight girls in white frocks of various styles, began dancing from the dancing sides of Miss Nancy Ferguson. They performed a sixteen-point reel which Robert Jarman, the adjudicator of the folk dancing section, termed "wonderful, vigorous and spirited." They carried off the Radbourne Challenge Cup for folk dances of any country other than Canada, and scored by a wide margin, the highest total of points awarded in any of the four classes which were judged during the afternoon.

This was the first occasion on which boys have ever entered the folk dancing section of the contest. Miss Ferguson states that she has the best part of 150 others almost equally proficient.

"I saw a sixtesome reel done in Vancouver three years ago by adults—excellently," said Mr. Jarman, "but nothing like as well as this afternoon."

"I have always been anxious to see boys take up folk dancing," he added. "He manipulated the eight young men on their sporting spirit in invading the dancing section, and also on their wonderful poise and spirit as dancers."

AGAIN VICTORS

Girls Central School also was awarded the Victoria and District Teachers' Association Cup for any English or other folk dancing. Their score was ninety points, with Miss H. A. Bradshaw's Quadra Street School class second with eighty-seven points for their version of "Picking Up Sticks," followed by North Ward School, "Norsouch;" Victoria West School, "The Merry Miller"; and South Park School, "Hercules" and "Berserkis," and Bessborough School, "Gathering Peacock."

The adjudicator explained that the second team would have scored a higher total but for the fact that they had danced "Picking Up Sticks," a very special dance, to a different tune. In stressing the great importance of dancing interpretation in folk dancing, showing how in many cases the music fitted the actions so closely that any change necessarily detracted from the meaning of the piece.

SOUTH PARK WIN

The Sayward Challenge Cup for Irish folk dances was awarded to Miss M. Croft's class from South Park School, dancing an Irish Jig in pretty costumes with alternate red and green skirts and caps. Their score was ninety-one. Gladstone School was third with eighty-four points, interpreting an Irish Lilt. They were followed by North Ward School, with a six-handed reel, a dance which the adjudicator stated that he had never seen before, and thought was better suited to boys, and Quadra School, also with an Irish Lilt.

OAKLANDS SECOND

In the Redbourne Cup class, won by the High School, Oaklands was second, with ninety points, with their interpretation of the Swedish folk dance, "Vatten." The Arion School third with "The Blue Bonnet" and Danish dances on a large scale, and South Park School and North Ward School equal fourth, both dancing the Italian Tarantella, in costume, and North Ward School in costume, and North Ward.

ADJUDICATOR'S COMMENTS

In his comments between the various classes the adjudicator showed his extensive knowledge of the subject of folk dancing, and gave many hints and suggestions on the technique of the art.

He made a day-long visit which he made recently to Prague, where he saw 25,000 men doing physical exercises and folk dances in one solid mass. He hoped that one day such a sight would be seen in Canada.

"I hope the children will keep up the interest after they leave school," he said. "They are not to be done just in school. They are worthwhile in themselves."

He referred to the international value of folk dancing in a nation such as Canada, where the various racial elements could retain their individuality, yet be cemented by a common love of the art.

Some of the points of criticism raised by Mr. Jarman—of which there were not very many—included the need for a light touch with the feet, the time being kept with the body and arms rather than by stamping on the floor; the desirability of opening out the figures of a dance so as to give more room; the need for a more uniform bearing at least as important as the rhythm, and the need for a happy and relaxed facial expression.

Other classes in the folk dancing section of the festival were judged at the High School this morning and afternoon.

COLUMBIA W.A. MET AT SOOKE

Consecration Service of the Coadjutor Bishop to Be Held

The monthly meeting of Columbia W.A. was held in Sooke Hall on Friday, the combined branches of Sooke and Victoria meeting at home. A welcome on behalf of both branches was extended to the board by Mrs. Greenwood.

The diocesan president, Lady Letham, was in the chair, and conveyed a message from the bishop asking that every branch in the diocese should be represented at the consecration service of a Coadjutor Bishop to be held at Christ Church Cathedral on Saturday at 10:15 a.m., June 20. The bishop is arranging a "quiet hour" on the previous day, and asks that W.A. members make a point of attending both services.

The meeting passed a vote of thanks by a standing vote to A. Bengough for his valuable help to the board in the matter of the printed work of the annual meeting, which were distributed by Mrs. Bengough at the meeting.

Mrs. Gilbert Ferrabee, Dominion president, will be in the city on June 16, it was announced, and arrangements for a public meeting that afternoon, at which Mrs. Ferrabee will speak, were discussed.

Arrangements also made for the next board meeting on Wednesday, June 16, at Mayne Island. Captain Maude will take the party direct to Mayne Island from Swartz Bay. Busse will leave the Vancouver Island Coach Lines depot at 9 a.m. Members are asked to make their reservations early at the depot as the steamer accommodation is limited to 125 person. No cars will be taken on board.

Officers gave reports on the work of their departments, the purpose and disposition of the united thank offering fund was discussed by Mrs. M. Humphries. Miss Mott spoke of The Living Message, of which she is diocesan editor and secretary; Miss Marion Henley gave an outline of the prayer partners' plan; and Miss Evelyn Gwynne spoke on the "extrements" fund and of its usefulness to those in the United thank offering. Rev. Lynn Still, Mr. Brown, Dominion Dewar secretary, gave a short talk on the work of the Dewar department.

Some of the beautiful work of the church embroidery guild was exhibited by Mrs. J. A. Greenway. The magazine secretary, Mrs. Philip, read a letter of thanks for the shipment of books sent to the church. The "Jesus centre" secretary also had a short talk on her work, and was working by the board for appropriate use of the bazaar for propaganda on the Bazaar.

The junior secretary, Miss G. Chisholm reported a successful rally held at Duncan on May 4, a meeting of four branches, with a service of thanksgiving and a service of refreshments.

The girls' secretary, Mrs. Willard Hartley, who attended the rally, spoke of the help such gatherings are to the leaders, and the value to the young girls in attending the meetings and making new friends.

Rev. H. M. Bolton held a noon-hour service in the church, and gave a short talk on the radio.

Mrs. W. H. Belton was the speaker at the afternoon session, and in her address gave much information with regard to the work of the women's auxiliary during the last fifty years.

Rev. H. M. Bolton held a noon-hour service in the church, and gave a short talk on the radio.

The educational secretary, Miss Alan Gardner, stressed the importance of study to obtain an intelligent understanding of the missionary work of the church.

The meeting was brought to a close with a half hour vote of thanks given by Mrs. G. W. Brooks on behalf of the board to the Sooke and Saanen branches for their hospitality.

Many a Man Has escaped a nervous breakdown

It is now becoming generally known, By word of mouth from one person to another, That scores of nervous, worried business men Attribute their escape from nervous collapse To the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. Business cares and worries of recent years Have made men old before their time. Almost daily you read of prominent men dropping out.

In the very prime of life. Others have survived, because they learned in time Of a way to restore nerve force to the body. As a result weak, halting vital organs Have again assumed their natural functions. Rest and sleep have become possible. And mind and body have been restored to normal. If you find yourself ailing Ask your friends about Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. In almost every family there is some one Who has profited by use of this modern restorative.

STAR RETURNS TO THE STAGE

Mary Pickford Will Seek Her Romance in Theatre and Movies

Associated Press

Seattle, May 18.—A philosophical Mary Pickford came to town to-day to return to the legitimate stage in a full length drama for the first time since she appeared in David Belasco's "The Good Little Devil."

If there was any sorrow in her heart over her divorce from Douglas Fairbanks, now in the South Seas, the girl's secretaries said gave no evidence of it.

"My mind is far from any sort of romance now," she said. "My romance will be with the theatre and the movies." Her name had been linked recently with that of Buddy Rogers, her leading man several years ago in "My Best Girl."

Monday night the curtain will rise in the Metropolitan Theatre here on Miss Pickford's presentation of George Abbott's "Coquette," which was her most successful talking picture and which she presented twice on the radio.

Special to The Times

Alberta, May 18.—Hale and hearty at the beginning of her eighty-ninth year, Mrs. Anna Farnham, affectionately known as "Granny," celebrated her anniversary of another year on Thursday, when Mrs. W. Swanston was hostess in her honor, and many pioneer families of the district were present.

As this is the last meeting of the season, it is hoped that all C.G.I.T. leaders and those interested in the work will be in attendance.

C.G.I.T. NOTES

LEADERS' COUNCIL

The regular monthly meeting of the Victoria C.G.I.T. Leaders' Council will be held at the home of Miss Lilian Parfitt, 3669 Fernwood Road, Monday, May 20, at 7:30 p.m. Guests invited are Capt. C. G. McFarlane, chairman, and Capt. G. C. McFarlane, chairman.

With the exception of the Victoria C.G.I.T. Girls' Council, the other C.G.I.T. groups will attend the meeting and take part in the general discussion.

There will be a short talk on the showing of the motion pictures of last year's senior provincial camp by Miss Parfitt. Miss Anne Farnham, Girls' Work Secretary of Vancouver, will attend the meeting and present an inspirational talk on the Holy Name.

Other speakers will include Capt. C. G. McFarlane, chairman, and Capt. G. C. McFarlane, chairman.

There will be a short talk on the day's programme. Bands, patrols and chariots were seen in street parades.

SHRINERS AT TACOMA TO-DAY

C.G.I.T. MOTTO GENERAL THEME

Annual Mother and Daughter Banquet Lovers' Day

On the eve of "Mother's Day" the C.G.I.T. department of the Emmanuel Baptist Church held their annual mother and daughter meeting, more than 100, including mothers, daughters and grandmothers, all dressed in white, in the church hall.

Guests included Mrs. Greenwood, Mrs. Parfitt, Capt. C. G. McFarlane, chairman, and Capt. G. C. McFarlane, chairman.

There were two children in each family and one is dominating, the other may very easily become contrary. Particularly if his will is almost but not quite equal to his mother's. Or if parents insist on one child dominating, the result is a definite banality.

The Canadian Girl in Training programme, "To Cherish Health, Strive Truth, Know God and Serve Others," was the general theme for the evening, and these four standards were emphasized in the table decorations of the four C.G.I.T. groups with the Pilgrims under the leadership of Mrs. Greenwood, Captain C. G. McFarlane, chairman, and Capt. G. C. McFarlane, camp scene as the centrepiece and the individual favors in green and white.

The "Pioneers" under the leadership of Miss Winnie Wallace, carried out the theme "To Seek Truth," with a miniature school and a college graduate pointing the way to the C.G.I.T. girl.

The "Crusaders" group, under the leadership of Miss Ethel Rhodes, used a miniature church as the centrepiece and the girls' cause and have represented the open Bible and a hymn book.

This table was most striking in its colors of red and white. "The Pilots" under the leadership of Miss Opal Abernethy, expressed the thought of service to all mankind.

Miss Dolly Crowther, the president of the C.G.I.T. department, was the hostess and presided over the gathering in a most efficient manner.

Miss Lilian Parfitt, director of girls' work, who is the mother of Mrs. Greenwood, which included representatives from all departments of the church and representatives from the Girls' Leaders' Council and the Victoria Girls' Council.

Greetings were brought by Misses Farnham from the Chinese C.G.I.T., Tokyo No. 2, from the Japanese C.G.I.T.: Avery Nixon, president of the Victoria Girls' Council, and Miss Gladys Seal, honorary president of the Girls' Leaders' Council.

A delightful sing-song was led by Miss Ethel Rhodes, after which came the toast to "The King." May Farnham proposed the toast "To Our Church," which was responded to by Rev. Dr. A. G. McFarlane. "To Our Mother" was proposed by Vera Browning, and responded to by Mrs. Dent. "To Our Queen" was proposed by Capt. C. G. McFarlane, and responded to by Capt. G. C. McFarlane, chairman of the Board of directors.

The first speaker for the evening was Mrs. P. W. McMillan, of the Douglas Street Baptist Church, who gave an inspirational message based on the purpose of the Canadian Girls' to Train Girls in the ways of the world.

After the meeting, the girls were invited to a tea party at Capt. C. G. McFarlane's home, where they remained until two years later.

In 1928 her second marriage took place to Capt. C. G. McFarlane, a pilot, Rev. Edward G. Taylor officiating. Her second widowhood came in 1935, when she has resided in Albermarle. She has three sons and five daughters, all of whom are married and have a family of their own.

After her first marriage she was a teacher in India, and her husband was a pilot. They were married in 1914, and he died in 1920.

ON TRIANGLE RUN SUNDAY

Princess Kathleen Will Re-heve Princess Charlotte To-morrow

Taking the afternoon sailing to Vancouver, the St. Princess Kathleen will to-morrow commence her son's duties on the triangle service between Victoria, Vancouver and Seattle. She will remain on the run until September.

To-day the Kathleen made her first trip of the season. Under the auspices of the King's Daughters she took 400 Victorians on a special excursion trip to Seattle.

The Princess Charlotte, which has been on the triangle run all winter, will come off to-morrow, and will be overhauling before starting her series of summer cruises to Alaska next month.

The Princess Victoria will continue on the triangle run until the Princess Marguerite takes over early in June. The Marguerite will remain on the triangle run from Vancouver to Victoria on May 24, and the following day will relieve the St. Princess Jean on the night run between Victoria and Vancouver. The Princess Elizabeth will then be overhauled.

It was announced yesterday that Princess Elizabeth would run an excursion from Victoria around the Gulf Islands on the afternoon and evening of May 24. Departure from the Belleville Street pier has been set for 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon, so that prospective passengers will be able to witness the departure.

The St. Princess Marian, sailing from Victoria to-night for Alaska ports, will take out a good list of passengers, including a group of employees of the White Pass and Yukon Railway going to Alaska and the Yukon to "open up" for the season.

It is hoped to have the Princess Louise ready to take the May 21 sailing to Alaska. She at present is in the government drydock at Esquimalt for extensive repairs.

BACK IN SERVICE

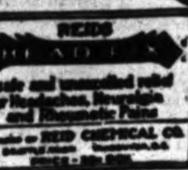

After spending the last four days on the slipway at the Esquimalt plant of Tarrow's Limited, the ferry Cascade returned to-day to service between Mill Bay and Brentwood. She was thoroughly overhauled, cleaned and painted.

The operators of the ferry are looking forward to a busy summer handling cars across Desolation Arm.

DISCUSSION ON CHAIN LETTERS

Threat to Monetary System Is Thoughtful People's Opinion, Says Dr. Davies

Dr. Clem Davies at his evening service at the Empire Theatre will answer the following questions:

"Is view of this being life insurance wise and then the better choice?"

"Can any government or party bring about a new system?"

"What event of much significance, according to the Great Pyramid, is going to take place on December 8, 1935?"

"How are the young people to know when they are really in love or only attracted by sex appeal?"

"Why should boys be brought from England to be placed in a farm school at Duncan, when so many of our own Canadian boys and girls cannot go?"

"Should a beer license be granted to a certain club near the Gorge, where thousands of children bathe during the summer?"

"Since the chain letter idea is generally regarded by thoughtful people as a real threat to the present monetary system, and since the chain letter idea is private money, do you not think the chain letter idea should be accordingly encouraged?"

"In view of the fact that Britain has abandoned its definitely the peace motif and is now busy building battle planes, would you say that war is imminent this year?"

"Granted a world war is coming, what do you advise one to personally do in a constructive individual way as a personal programme?"

"What is your frank opinion of the Jubilee awards in the matter of the giving of service medals locally?"

"Why do you believe and preach 'Truth'?"

At the morning service Dr. Davies will have for his service subject "The Hidden Secrets of Human Personality or the Secrets of the Subconscious Mind."

At the evening service Dr. Davies will have for his service subject "The Great Outlines of Life."

The City Temple choir will sing "O Praise the Lord!" (Hari of Wilton).

G. A. A. Hebdon will be the pulpit guest at the evening service at 7:30 o'clock and will give a special message entitled: "Christianity in a Modern World." The City Temple choir will sing "Holy Art Thou," (Handel), also, bass solo by J. Petrie.

MRS. MOODY IN NET COMEBACK

Former World Champ Hopes to Compete at Wimbledon; Recovered From Injury

Ron Francisco, May 18.—Back to the scene of former triumphs Helen Wills Moody was headed to-day, apparently bent on again exceeding the heights she once ruled as queen of the tennis world.

England was her destination. Her object—an expected comeback attempt on the courts at Wimbledon.

"I am not definitely I will play, but if I feel as well as I do now, I will," said the former tennis champion, who was forced from the courts two years ago by a back injury.

A trunk full of tennis clothes and new racquets bespeak the confidence Mrs. Moody did not herself express that she would find it not at all impossible to regain her place in international competition.

Complete secrecy surrounded Mrs. Moody's intentions until a few hours before her departure yesterday evening, when she disclosed to the Associated Press plans for her intended comeback.

"I just made up my mind this afternoon, and I had the back of that trunk ready. I had the story of six weeks of hard practice, which apparently convinced her that she has indeed recovered from the injury that forced her to default to Helen Jacobs in the finals of the national championships two years ago.

Observers, too, have been convinced of Mrs. Moody's return to form. Miss Monica, a new-time national titleholder, plans to sail from New York for England next week.

Miss Sessions will be played at the Colwood Golf Club on May 24. Competitors will select their own men, opponents and arrange their own flights.

Senior A Men Open Tuesday Evening; Champion New Methods Meet Silent Glows

WEEK SCHEDULE IS ANNOUNCED

With a strong entry in all divisions the lid will be pried off the 1935 softball season on Monday evening, with the opening games in the C and D sections. The complete schedule for the first week for all sections was announced to-day by Ernie Oliver, secretary of the Lower Island Softball Association.

Tuesday evening will be played Monday evening in each of the two sections. In the C division the Esquimalt Meat Market meet R. & T. Workers, Maple Leafs oppose the Coopers and the Civil Service Club tackle the Hollywood Club. The D section games bring together 17th Panthers and Native Sons, C.C.V., and Canadian Scottish, while the Duroids get a bye.

SENIORS START TUESDAY

Tuesday evening will witness the first games in the senior men's division, the opening of the regular league. In the feature clash the New Method Laundry, last year's Vancouver Island champions, will stack up against the Silent Glows at the Athletic Park. The Silent Glows are last year's Heavers, who finished runners-up to the New Method for the city championship. Two other senior games Tuesday will pit the Army against the City Staff, Work Point Barracks and Brandon's Boys against Bert Waudes at Bullion Park. The senior clubs will go into action again on Thursday night with three games.

SCHEDULE

The complete schedule for next week follows:

Salmonbellies Drop 14 to 13 Decision to Richmond in Lacrosse League

Vancouver, May 18.—For the second time in a week the Salmonbellies of New Westminster have suffered defeat by one point. Yesterday evening it was Richmond of the InterCity Lacrosse League who barely nipped out the New Westminster squad.

"It just ends up my mind this afternoon, and I had the back of that trunk ready. I had the story of six weeks of hard practice, which apparently convinced her that she has indeed recovered from the injury that forced her to default to Helen Jacobs in the finals of the national championships two years ago.

Mrs. Hutchinson and Peggy Allen Battle

IN GOLF FINAL

Oak Bay Player and George Vale Youngster Play at Colwood To-day For B.C. Golf Crown; Former Defeats Mrs. Philbrick; Miss Allen Eliminated Mrs. Sayward-Wilson

To-day at the Colwood Golf Club, Peggy Allen, seventeen-year-old member of the George Vale Golf Club, battled Mrs. E. Hutchinson, Oak Bay, in the thirty-six-hole final for the British Columbia women's championship. The victor will receive Miss Kay Farwell, Vancouver, as queen of the province's golfing fraternity.

In yesterday's semi-final, Miss Allen triumphed in a splendid performance to eliminate Mrs. F. F. Sayward-Wilson, home club star, 2 and 1, while Mrs. Hutchinson came through with a thrilling victory over her cuskate, Mrs. E. B. Philbrick, at the ninth-hole.

Steadying down in the latter stages of the match after suffering an apparent attack of nerves, Mrs. Allen rallied enough in her match with Mrs. Sayward-Wilson. The latter had trouble all day with her putter, and several times her spoopy work on the greens cost her holes. The pair halved the first two holes, with Miss Allen winning the next four to go out in front. The fifth, seventh, and ninth holes were all won by Allen, and the match was all even once more.

After halving the fifteenth, Miss Allen conceded the tenth to reduce her lead to a single hole. At the thirty-five yard approach shot, Mrs. Sayward-Wilson captured the eleventh to square the match. Mrs. Hutchinson went into the lead for the first time by winning the twelfth. The thirteenth was split. A par five won the fourteenth for Miss Allen and the match was all even once more.

After bungling her drive and putting three balls out of bounds, Miss Allen conceded the tenth to reduce her lead to a single hole. At the thirty-five yard approach shot, Mrs. Sayward-Wilson captured the eleventh to square the match. Mrs. Hutchinson went into the lead for the first time by winning the twelfth. H. F. Mathews, general manager,
Canadian Pacific Railway hotel,
Montreal, is in the city to-day, accompanied by J. W. Grocock, engineer of buildings. The visit of Mr. Mathews to the Coast is linked with the opening of the tourist hotel resort in the Canadian Rockies for the summer season.

Banff Springs Hotel will be opened on June 16 and Lake Louise Chalets on June 21, the general manager of the system stated at the Empress Hotel this morning.

Plans for the extension of the crescent wings of the Empress Hotel, first considered when the new north wing of the hotel was built, and since revived by the crowded nature of important social functions, were not confirmed by Mr. Mathews when questioned on the matter. Extension of the ballroom eastward towards Douglas Street, however, is suggested, but officially there is no knowledge of it. A painting contract has just been completed and attention given to the ceiling of the tea foyer.

The hotel was inspected to-day by the general manager in company with Mr. Grocock. No significance was attached to this, however, other than usual general inspection.

While in Vancouver, Mr. Mathews inspected the completion of alterations in the main dining-room of the Hotel Vancouver.

GOOD TRAVEL YEAR

The coming tourist season at the mountain resorts should be a good one, according to Mr. Mathews. This view is borne out by the volume of advance reservations which gives an indication of a very successful season.

The general manager of C.P.R.

hotels is not in the habit of overestimating prospects of summer travel and is consistently guarded in his statements in that respect. He expressed conviction that this year's travel movement would show a definite improvement over last year.

The attention of Mr. Mathews never fails to be aroused by the uncommonly good weather which is not supperior to any other hotel of the company's continental chain. He made complimentary reference to day to the glorious wealth of bloom about the hotel.

On his return east, Mr. Mathews

SHEEP SCHEME IS SUSPENDED

Agency Opened Saturday,
Closed Wednesday; Lamb
Drops Two Cents

The British Columbia Sheep Marketing scheme has been suspended.

Owing to the protests of some sheep breeders, especially those on Salt
Spring Island, a loophole was discovered in the scheme, and marketing of the lambs and sheep in Victoria has been lifted for the present.

The result has been that prices for lamb have dropped 2¢ a pound.

The sheep board announced in the press last week that from Saturday on all sheep on Vancouver Island could only be sold through the board.

They opened an agency in Victoria with offices in the E. Wilson Cold Storage Building.

The Salt Spring Island sheepmen, though they had agreed to draw up the scheme, now oppose it. They would prefer sheep straight to Burns and Co. without consulting the agency.

The wholesalers turned the sheep down, saying they could only take sheep marketed through the agency. The sheepmen refused to sell their produce through the agency or to pay any levy to the agent.

Finally, after a curfew by-law might have been imposed by the police force in the city, the chief expressed his support for a scheme to be regular, animal roller skating rinks, and parks, and playgrounds to keep children off the streets.

They are a traffic menace and, in some cases, a nuisance to residents.

There is growing dissatisfaction with the marketing act among certain sheep breeders on Vancouver Island.

Meetings have been called in several districts, and, according to Gavin Mowat, at a gathering of sheepmen in Ganges fifty voted against it.

Mr. Paulding will discuss the use of the leisure time of young business men to the Board of Trade.

He will stop off at Lake Louise and Banff to inspect arrangements for the opening of the mountain resorts.

With him is his private secretary,
W. A. Reynolds.

NEW HOUSES BEING BUILT

Permits for three new dwellings in the city were taken out at the city building inspector's office this week.

They had an aggregate value of $6,700.

On Monday a permit was issued to
A. Rumney for a four-room dwelling at 912 Alton Street. The home which will be put up by day labor will be a stucco structure valued at $1,600.

Another $1,600 house is being built at 2450 Avenue B by W. B. Dilworth.

The largest of the three, a seven-room frame and stucco structure, is being built at 1009 Penthouse Place by A. W. B. Jones at a cost of $2,500.

AGED TRAPPER BELIEVED DEAD

John Fowler, an eighty-year-old trapper of Great Glacier, on the Stikine River, is believed to have lost his life during the last week, according to Provincial Police radio advice received to-day from Telegraph Creek. His river boat was found adrift.

Police were informed of the suspected tragedy when Capt. Barrington, of the Barrington Transportation Company, arrived at Telegraph Creek with the first boat up the river from Wrangell to-day. He reported that he had seen the boat adrift, containing an outboard engine, tent, and two, snowshoes and a rifle. It was found upstream from Fowler's Camp.

ROOSEVELT TO SPEAK ON VETO

WHY Tell U.S. House Why
He Refuses to Sign
Veterans' Bonus Bill

Associated Press

Washington, May 16.—Senate administration leaders expressed the belief to-day that President Roosevelt would not forth his views on currency inflation when he shall present his program to the Senate on Tuesday evening. He had been asked to do so by the Senate Finance Committee.

One objection raised against the $2,500,000 new currency bill in administration quarters has been that the value of currency inflation is questionable. Just what language the President will choose to deal with the monetary aspects of the bonus issue was a question of much interest in the Capital.

The President's announcement late yesterday that he would go to the House of Representatives chamber in person, to read his message to both Houses, and his declaration that "I hope with all my heart the veto will be sustained," seemed to create gloom among the friends of the Patman Great War Veterans' bonus bill. The administration had been advised privately they had insufficient votes to overrule a veto.

PERSONS AND EVENTS IN THE NEWS

"HORNETS' NEST" RIDES WAVES

The winged power of America's fighting forces is strikingly pictured in this formidable array of navy planes on the deck of the aircraft carrier Saratoga as it cleaves the Pacific to take part in the navy maneuvers. Efficiency of the air arm of the nation's defenders will be given a severe test in the sea war games, which will continue until June 10.

"HAIL THE KING!"

This most fascinating view of London, looking up Ludgate Hill toward the inspiring mass of St. Paul's Cathedral, shows how the British capital has been transformed for the Silver Jubilee celebration of George V's twenty-five-year reign. Bunting, streamers and flags give the famous old street a gay carnival appearance.

FASTEST IN WORLD OF ITS TYPE

Spend stands out in every line of this huge trim ship, the largest and fastest single-engined amphibian transport in the world, the Baby Clipper, just completed for the Pan American Airways System. Carrying two pilots, eight passengers and 1,600 pounds of cargo, the craft can attain a cruising speed of 155 miles an hour. Every part of the craft is streamlined, the main wheels retracting flush with the underside of the wing to eliminate resistance and even the wing tip floats and the tail wheel retracting.

THE DUST STORM STRIKES!

One of the most remarkable photographs ever taken of a dust storm's approach, this snapshot was made by an amateur at the very instant when the billowing black cloud rolled over the Panhandle town of Pampa, Tex., shutting out daylight, stifling inhabitants, and settling into homes and stores before moving on to wreak havoc on sparse crops remaining in the blighted district. The picture, typical of scenes in the southwest, is distilling to those in more distant parts of the country where the dust's approach has been more like the gradual settling of a fog. Here the storm's entry shows the suddenness of an explosion.

WEATHERS 2,000 FLIGHTS

Honored by the National Aeronautic Association at a luncheon in Washington for making 2,000 consecutive daily flights averaging two hours each, Dr. John D. Brook believes he has proved that flying is safe in any weather. He has gone alone in snowstorms, sleet, rain and dust storms.

FAIR CANADIAN ILL.

Mr. Charles Saunders, who gained world-wide fame for his efforts in developing Marquis wheat, is reported to be "quite ill" at his hotel in Ottawa.

TANK RUMBLERS ON, GRIM ITALIAN THREAT TO ABYSSINIA

Vividly illustrating the might of one arm of the Italian military power which threatens Abyssinia, with new complications rising in Africa, is this army tank, caught by the camera in a spectacular shot as it went off a wall nine feet high which stood in its path. Landing safely, it continued its attack journey in漫uevers held in Italy before the critical eyes of Premier Benito Mussolini.

LONE PAPA IS FAR-BACK ALSO-RAN IN DIAPER RACE

In a cloud of talcum powder with safety pins clicking a merry refrain, ten mothers and a father staged a whirlwind diaper-changing contest as part of the programme of the Better Homes Exposition in Chicago. When the last flap had been folded, using the regulation triangle and four-pin system, Mrs. Joseph Pieprzyk, fourth from the left, was the winner, with record time of twenty-nine seconds. The lone hapless father, Herbert Beck, was an also-ran, with his time of thirty-nine seconds.

TAKE OATH OF LOYALTY

At a gigantic gathering before the Assembly at Medling, near Vienna, members of the Fatherland Front, the organization formed by the late Chancellor Dollfuss, swore allegiance to their country and declared their determination to guarantee Austria's independence. Picture shows Prince Starhemberg addressing multitude.

WATCH MY SMOKE!

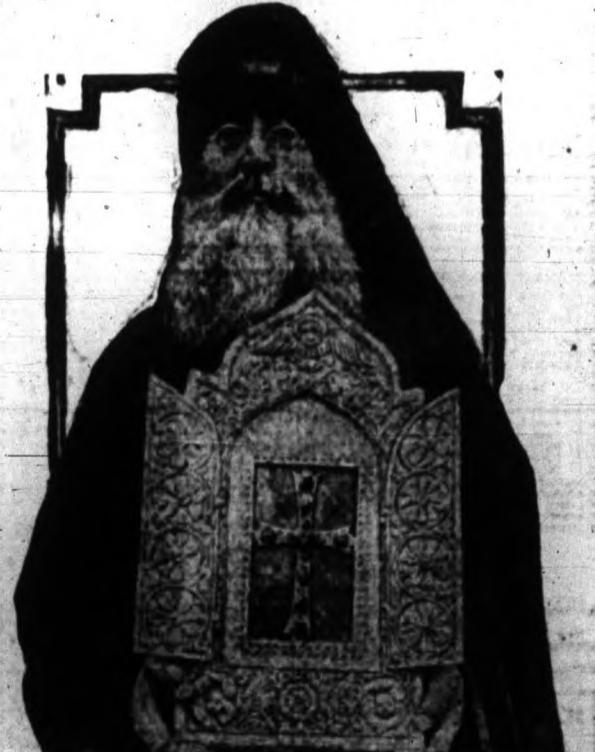

Heralded as the fastest in the world, its puffing smoke imparting some of the romance of the iron horse, this giant of the rails is shown as it reached Chicago to be placed in service on the Milwaukee road. The first-built streamlined steam locomotive, designed to travel 120 miles an hour, the Hiawatha is resplendent in its coat of battleship gray, with orange and chromium trim.

BEATS STEVE BRODIE LEAP AND LIVES

The glory that was Steve Brodile's is dimmed, the record he made in his famed Brooklyn bridge leap shattered. Weighed with twenty-five pounds of tools, Joe Tomaszewitch plunged 150 feet — fifteen feet better than Steve's mark-off the new Mississippi River bridge above New Orleans, as indicated at the right, and lives to tell his tale. The bridge man, shown in a New Orleans hospital, hurtled from the span, kept his head as he spun down, and came until reeled, despite broken ribs.

NOAH'S ARC RELIC FEARED DAMAGED

All that is left of Noah's Ark is a piece of petrified wood found by the monks of St. Benedict (shown displayed by one of monks) on Mount Ararat. The monks regard this piece of the Ark as an historic relic and not as a religious relic. It was found that the famous monastery was in the area of the violent earthquake caused by the volcanic activity of Mt. Ararat, which spread death and destruction.

MOVIE HUMOR HAS CHANGED

Comedy in Pictures Shows Marked Difference in Recent Years

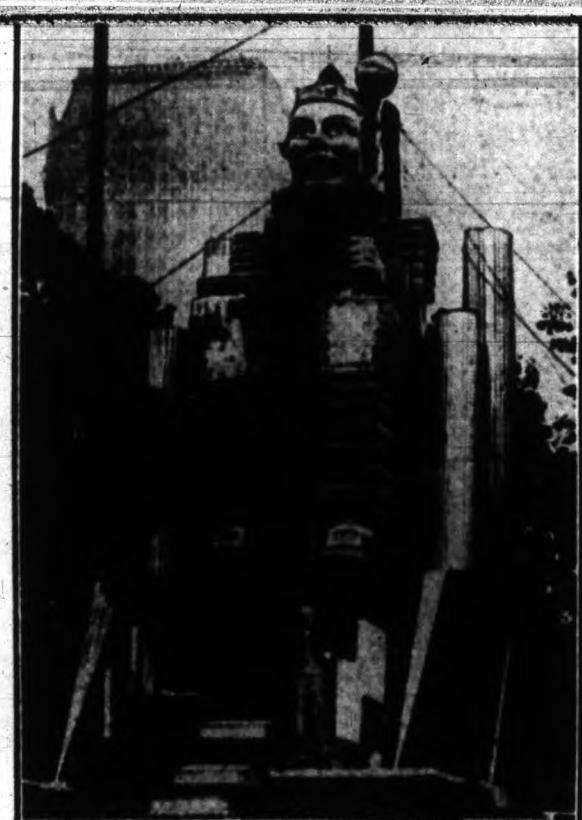

Hollywood, May 18.—A new theory on the commodity truth, reveals that it is not only stranger than fiction, but frequently much more ludicrous.

A few short years ago no screen comedy star could afford to be too expensive. The average salary was $10,000 a week. Nearly all contracts of that size are written with twelve week lay-offs clauses. In other words, the actor receives only 40,000 a year.

Of that amount he must pay his agents 10 per cent. Another 10 per cent goes for professional purposes, advertising, publicity, wardrobe, make-up, etc.

Federal income tax amounts to approximately $2,500 a month. Living expenses will chop off about another $20,000. This includes maintenance by box office response.

BALES OF FUN FOR KING COTTON

Monarch of vast realms, this Colossus of Cotton gazed out on downtown Memphis as thousands of his loyal subjects paid homage during festivities of the Cotton Carnival and National Cotton Show in the Tennessee city.

Mounted on a throne of cotton bales, the huge figure was built by high school students, who spent months on the job.

Will Hays, Movie Czar, Would Censor News of Film Stars Salaries; Big Sums Are Acquired and Spent

The Times Staff Correspondent Hollywood, May 18.—Jean Harlow has a decided preference for white satin pyjamas. Gary Cooper likes to sit in front of an open fire with his shoes off. Janet Gaynor prefers tea to coffee. Jimmy Cagney seldom eats breakfast.

If Clark Will Hays has his way, this is the sort of item you will read about Hollywood's scintillating screen stars in the future. At least there will be more profit about Shirley Temple's $50,000 yearly contract or the $30,000 paid to Garbo for each picture she makes.

Believing that stories (many of them greatly exaggerated) about the stars' enormous salaries are largely responsible for many of the proposed measures to heap heavier taxes upon the film industry, Hays has instructed all studios to refrain from referring to salaries paid to their players.

Of course, that order does not necessarily mean no more such figures will be printed. Hays, you see, runs only the movie industry.

FIGURES DWINDLE FAST

However, since future salaries are going to be difficult to learn, this seems a very appropriate time to make a survey of just where those salaries go.

Actually they are somewhat of a myth. By the time necessary expenditures are deducted, there is not a great deal left. And, after all, it is what you have left at the end of a year that counts.

Take, for example, the average movie star whose salary is $10,000 a week. Nearly all contracts of that size are written with twelve week lay-off clauses. In other words, the actor receives only 40,000 a year.

Of that amount he must pay his agents 10 per cent. Another 10 per cent goes for professional purposes, advertising, publicity, wardrobe, make-up, etc.

Federal income tax amounts to approximately $2,500 a month. Living expenses will chop off about another $20,000. This includes maintenance by box office response.

Merriman Talks

This verse came in after the stuff below was written. The poet seems to be echoing the feelings of a lot of people in town from what I gather on the beat.

The latest craze to hit the town
Has got the post-clerk right down.
Now they are busy all the time
Hunting for the lowly dime.
A friend sends one to wish you well
But the postmen think it's just plain h—
I hope the darn thing doesn't stop
Until my name's right at the top.
* * *

TWO OR THREE weeks more of this newspaper work and I expect to say goodbye to all News Eds. and Mag. Eds. and go fishing indefinitely. Mr. Gilbert doesn't know it yet but I expect to make him an offer so large for his boathouse at Brentwood that although he probably has no intention of selling he will not be able to refuse.

IN THE BAG

It is in the bag. I have got in on this dime letter idea. Three weeks ago, when the craze that has been sweeping the United States hit Victoria, I got hold of two or three letters and shot off the dimes. Then a two-bit one came along and I passed that one around, too.

Dimes and five-dollar ones followed, but not wanting the responsibility that too much money brings, I passed those on to wealthier friends to handle. Thousands did me. Millions are too cumbersome to handle.

WON'T BE LONG NOW

Next Monday the first of the dimes and quarters should be coming along. It is hard to realize that in a couple of days I shall be worth thousands, while at the present moment I am in the financial condition of wishing to-day was pay day with this firm, instead of Monday.

Of course most of you people reading this are in the same position. All Victoria will be sitting on the top of the world by Monday, but in your rush to start up nice little businesses, please leave me the boathouse.

AND THE DOLLARS ROLLING IN

For the moment I can think of nothing better than that place at Brentwood where a man could jump in a boat every morning, catch salmon or grills all day while he left a husky young man renting out a hundred boats a day at a dollar a time, and then come back each night to add his daily $100 to the bankroll... plus, of course, what the dime and quarter chain letters continue to bring in. It will be a great life.

PYRAMID TO PROSPERITY

This pyramid path to prosperity is so simple I can't understand what Premier Bennett, Premier Pattiello and Mayor Leeming have been doing all these years. It is so obvious. All we have to do is to keep giving each other dimes and Gerry McGee and all the other politicians with sound money, stamp money, depression money, and wonder money, millions and millions of the public's money, and then change the whole atmosphere of life.

The first day, the letter hit town the picture was changed. The old depression song "Brother, Can You Spare a Dime?" went out. In its place came the query "Brother, Can You Spare a Dime Letter?" Some of my friends are in on dozens of them. They will make hundreds of thousands while I only make thousands, but I don't mind that. Thirty or forty thousand—and the boathouse—is all I want.

"THEN YOU'LL WAKE UP"

I warned the News Ed. I expected to be leaving to start in the boat business in a couple of days, by which time I expect my name to have reached the top on 15,426 dime letters; but he wasn't impressed.

"Then you'll wake up," he said, and gave me a mathematical talk on geometrical progression, including the statement that if seven people sent out the letters to five others and all followed the instructions it would be enough to blanket the whole of the people of Vancouver Island in about a week. He also gave a lot of other arguments along the same lines.

I have been thinking the arguments over, so Mr. Gilbert, if you happen to read this, maybe that deal won't go through. Perhaps I won't be tempting you with an offer so big that you'll be forced to sell that boathouse that you probably want to keep anyway. Don't do anything about it until you hear from me again. I'll let you know by Monday if the dimes and quarters come in.

COLLECTING THE WAR DEBT

I notice all the addresses on the chain letters I got called for dimes and quarters to be sent to Los Angeles, Alameda, San Francisco and Oklahoma.

Maybe it is all only a scheme. Maybe it is only California's playful little way of collecting its share of war debts through Canada. Since I started writing this it is beginning to look as if there is a bigger in the woodpile. I haven't started receiving any dimes yet, but every time the mail comes in I get a bunch of invitations to send some.

Probably it is just as well the way it has turned out. Since I started to write this the whole thing seems to have blown up.

"Get a story from the postmaster," says the News Ed. I did. Mr. Gardner informed us Ottawa is shutting down on the idea. All the dime letters they can detect are going to the dead-letter office.

"Write it," said the News Ed.

BANG GOES A FORTUNE

Without batting an eyelid he ordered me to write a story which he knew would wreck my chances of a fortune and the Brentwood boathouse—a story that meant a cool loss of $50,000 to $60,000 to me and a lot of the other reporters on the staff.

And still lots of people say the newspaper business is a good business and they want to get their sons into it.

What kind of receptions can we expect now from our friends to whom we had guaranteed fortunes by letting them in the ground floor of the dime chain industry.

CHRISTMAS EVERY DAY

It is too bad those letter writers who aired their views in the paper couldn't persuade the government to let every day be Christmas Day and do a rushing business in stamps and take hundreds of men off the unemployed list and put them back at work at big wages delivering everybody else dimes as fast as they could, from great loads piled in high-powered motor cars.

But as I write this a brilliant idea strikes me, out of which I expect to make another fortune to replace the one I nearly made from the dime letter chain.

A DIME LETTER POST OFFICE

We will start up an opposition post office. Since the government wishes to be unique as the only firm in the world that during the depression fights against too much business, we'll start a rival post office. This is the opportune time. I am glad of this. I was getting quite depressed over the loss of my dime chain fortune. Sorry I haven't got time to write anything more to this column. I have to rush out and put into effect immediately the organization of this great and stupendous new idea.

NINETY-FOUR CENTS

One of these practical chaps says put this in for the benefit of those who boast of their importance. Ninety-four cents, it says, is the maximum value of any one person. Dr. Thomas E. Lawson, noted British physician, is the authority.

Dr. Lawson says that the average human body is composed of enough water to fill a ten-gallon barrel; enough fat for seven bars of soap; carbon enough for $99 lead pencils; phosphorus enough to make 2,000 match heads; sufficient magnesium for one dose of salt; enough iron to make one medium-sized nail; sufficient lime to whitewash a chicken coop, and sulphur enough to rid one dog of fleas. All of this, at prevailing market prices, would amount to ninety-four cents. So now, no matter how much a fellow thinks he is worth, you know his actual value.

Rioting and Cries of "Heil Hitler!" In Northern Africa Now Fret France

Move To Drive Out Christians May Forecast Fierce Holy War

By MORRIS GILBERT

PARIS.

FRANCE'S great colonial empire of North Africa, with its vast territory and its 100,000,000 inhabitants, is in grave danger.

Fires of unrest, smouldering for months, perhaps years, have suddenly burst into sporadic flame, and qualified observers do not hesitate here to give harsh warning to the government that the actual loss of this great semi-continent is quite possible.

There are three chief causes for unrest, each more serious than the other. First is the economic crisis

CRUISING SPIRIT OF ISLAM SPREADS

Third, possibly most important, is the spread of pan-Islamism with its threat of jihad—"Holy War"—to drive out the "Roumias," the Christians.

Already a "Mahdi," a New Prophet, has risen. He is Dr. Ben Djelloul, Peasant-trained physician, focus of the African "separatist movement" directing from his humble home in the Arab quarter of the town of Constantine the anti-French action of untold thousands of obscure tribesmen from the Grand Atlas Mountains to the deserts of deep Sahara.

It was the false rumor that "a Jew has killed Ben Djelloul" which precipitated the fierce rioting in Constantine last August, after the Moslem population had felt itself grossly insulted by a drunken Jewish army tailor.

Behind Ben Djelloul the leaders of Mohammedan fundamentalism—the "Neo-Wahabites"—are urging fierce doctrines of pure Islamism and a return to the austere, desert-born fervor of their faith.

TWENTY-FIVE JEWS SLAIN IN STREET FIGHTS

The first recent manifestation of mass hatred of the non-Moslem population of France's North African possessions—there are 900,000 native and naturalized French in the region, including many African Jews—occurred in Constantine last summer. When the three days of street fighting had ended, twenty-five Jews had been slain, including three infants snatched from their mothers' arms. Deaths among the Arabs were also numerous, and the property loss in gutted shops and looted homes was

At Sidi-el-Abbes presently there was a serious riot of unemployed. A strike at Bone followed. The other day the town of Setif burst into uproar, when a native soldier was obliged to shoot another soldier who was running amuck. The most disquieting element of this affair was that native troops fired upon their own comrades and defied French authority and supremacy.

ANTI-SEMITISM VEINS FRENCH FOES

Two other recent episodes recently gave further proof that Arab anti-Semitism in some cases is merely a veil for anti-Frenchism. In the town of Mascara, Arabs interfered in the arrest of one of their compatriots and menaced the French military authorities. In Tlemcen a Moslem crowd cheered a film of Hitler. Again in Mascara, 2,000 natives greeted Ben Badir, a Lieutenant of Dr. Ben Djelloul with a perfectly executed Fascist salute!

In an Algerian port, a French wine land—the green flag of the Prophet is drawing its swarms of devotees. "No war was ever started exclusively for religious motives," declares one French commentator. "Our own Crusades were economic and dynastic as well as religious." The same is true of Algerian unrest, he says. It is the economic crisis which is turning under-fed and hopeless people to the banner of their faith.

The crisis in North Africa, unlike that in France, has great similarity to that through which North America was recently passing. North Africa is a country of vast production of wheat, fruit, olives, and wine. In the hundred years of French colonization there never have been such bad times as now. That is because of recent expansion, which in boom days, gave the French empire in Africa an outlet for its surplus products and high prices. The markets are now closed. There is no demand for Algerian wheat. France herself has restricted the import of Algeria's own vineyards.

RADICAL LEADERS

FRANCE TAUGHT

France herself is to blame for the intellectual unrest of the colonies also. Young Arabs, taught in French schools and colleges, or who have lived in France, return home with a working knowledge of Communism, and with full information about France's own troubles.

Such a man is Dr. Ben Djelloul, product of French universities and hospitals, fully acquainted with the life of the French capital.

Every day when a passenger vessel docks at Algiers, people on board see the same phenomenon—a score of hats, tossed overboard to float like buoys as they please. It is the symbolic gesture of the young Mohammedan, casting off the signs of western civilization, and preparing to wear the fez again.

Tourists Scarce --- So France Starts Psycho-analyzing Self

Forgotten War Lord At 70 May Become Nazi Army Chief

Special London Correspondence of The Victoria Daily Times

LONDON.

UNLESS all signs fail, Eric Ludendorff, for long buried professionally, politically, editorially, will be resurrected, besotted by the Nazi Germany which not so long ago ignored him, condemned him, treated him as a nullity.

It would surprise nobody in Germany if the masters of that country found some way to bring him back into the limelight. It is even said that General Ludendorff—seventy years old in April—may be called to go back into active army service as one of the guiding spirits of the general staff of the big army. The Nazis openly admit they are conscripting. If this occurs, it will be a dazzling "up" in the career of a man who has written in his past military history and who has known his share of ups and downs.

MADE MARK IN WORLD WAR

Born in 1865 near Posen, then the capital of that portion of Prussia which Germany stole during the partition of the Polish kingdom, after entering the cadet corps, he gradually rose in the hierarchy of the army until in 1913 he was commander of the 36th Fusilier Regiment. He was known as an earnest student of all war matters, but notably thought of him as particularly brilliant. The outbreak of the World War found him a mere brigade commander at Strasbourg in Alsace. He was sent to join the staff of General von Einrich, whose job it was to take Liege and prepare the way for the overrun of the German army through stricken Belgium. Ludendorff was not content to be an office executive. He organized and led the German brigade which stormed the outer line of forts at Liege and at once received one of the highest military decorations from the army.

Eric Ludendorff . . . "like Atlas, carried a world on his shoulders."

He had studied every inch of the terrain. On August 22, 1914, when the war was barely three weeks old, the Kaiser assigned Ludendorff to be the chief of staff of Hindenburg, who was to take charge of the 8th Army in East Prussia. The two men had never met, but they were now to engage in a partnership which was to last throughout the war.

HINDENBURG KNEW TERRAIN

Hindenburg knew East Prussia like a book. He came from there and tended from the famous old Teutoburg forest across the Boine to the Elbe Tower. The present Elbe is to be enlarged and will become the principal street of the fair. Both banks of the Boine, for a space of seventy acres, will have pavilions, palaces, exhibition halls, landscape gardens and fountains. A striking feature will be the use of the Seine basin—Chicago used its lakefront showboats and other water-born developments. Foreign exhibitions will be grouped on both banks of the Seine stretching east and west from the enlarged Port d'Aval.

TOO MANY DIES

THE GREAT exposition here in 1927 to draw its inspiration not only from the Paris Exposition of 1925 but from the Chicago Fair just closed, according to the revelations of Edmond Labey, director. The Paris Exposition is to be called "Art and Technique in Modern Life" and will have as its theme as Chicago had, to reveal the application of the principles of science and art to the modern world.

The site of the Paris Exposition is the magnificent stretch of park sur-Ludendorff staked all in defeating the Allies before the American troops could come in great numbers—and lost. He then actually demanded that Germany sue for peace.

On October 26, 1918, he resigned his post and fled to Sweden in disguise, fearing the revolution-ready soldiers. Later he returned and settled down in Munich, which then was violently opposed to "Red Berlin" and was the happy hunting ground of all the enemies of the republic. Here he contacted with Adolf Hitler and they concerted the ignominious putsch of 1923 which collapsed when one regiment of Bavarian troops fired at the rag-tag and bob-tail that composed the putsch "army." Hitler got a slight wound and fled in an automobile. Ludendorff flopped down in the muddy street. Hitler was sentenced to five years' detention in a fortress. Ludendorff, in view of his past services, got off scot-free.

WAYS THEN PARTED

Ludendorff and Hitler never played together again. The latter became busy and organized his Nazi Party. Ludendorff ploughed a lonely furrow, issuing a small paper which attacked Jews, Catholics and Free Masons—just as Hitler did. But Ludendorff went further. He even began to abandon Christianity altogether and advocated in a hasty way some sort of return to the good old German gods—Olin, Wodin, etc. His stock fell so low that about a year ago the Nazis suppressed his paper.

Things have changed lately and Ludendorff still seems to be rising again. Recently, on the day when the Germans held a hour of remembrance of their war dead, General von Blomberg, head of the armed forces of the nation, said in plain words:

"On this day we think of the men, who from the glorious beginning at Tannenberg on through the heroic course of the World War, stood by Hindenburg's side, who by his strength, like Atlas, carried a world on his shoulders. We incite before Field Marshal Ludendorff."

PRESS LAUDS SPEECH

These outpouring words, after so many years of silence, might mean that Hitler was extending the olive branch to the old man, or they might indicate the increasing power of the army in the affairs of Germany—so much so that its directing hand felt able to express his real feeling—despite anything the Nazis might say. But the chance was very strong that Hitler agreed to the speech. The best sign is that the German press gave echo to the Von Blomberg speech by editorials which said that Von Blomberg's tribute truly expressed the admiration and thanks of the whole German people.

So at least it is not unlikely that the old general may once more put on his uniform and sit at the side of the mighty in directing the upbuilding of the newer and bigger German army.

IGNORED KAISER'S SUGGESTIONS

Growing in power, the twin virility of the Kaiser side and ignored his strategical suggestions. In the last year of the war, the collapse of Russia allowed them to withdraw large numbers of trained troops from the eastern front. Like a genuine

Just Like Chickens?

By KENNETH DRURY

IF YOU WANT to coax chickens from one coop to another, you sprinkle grain along the path between the coops, and put lots of grain inside the new coop," says C.C.P. Professor Lorne Jenkins in the C.C.P. three-act play, "The Brains We Trust," by William Irvine, M.P., just published in a popular edition by Thomas Nelson and Sons Limited, Toronto.

To the chickens are likened the voters of Canada. "The chicken feed is patronage or pork barrel appropriations or whatever else you may call what is used to lure the chicken-minded voter at election time."

"That's just what the old parties do, isn't it?" remarks Mrs. Andrew, president of the National Women's Labor League, in the play.

"Yes," replies Jenkins, "and they'll get all the chickens into their old ramshackle coops while we stand in the barnyard explaining, elaborately, the hygienic and architectural advantages of our new one . . . Do we want to be a practical party or merely a group of idealists grasping at the stars? . . . Isn't this depression the result of exploiting ignorance and fear at the ballot box? Who's got that practical?"

In such a way is presented the political idealism of the Socialist-C.C.P. movement in Canada, contrasted with the pragmatism of the old-line parties and their understanding of the means of swaying the mass mind.

Mr. Irvine sets out at the opening that "all the incidents and characters of this play are wholly imaginary." But Rt. Hon. Hector Dickson, prime minister and leader of the Loyalist Party, is to the last detail an impersonation of Premier Bennett. Robert McGregor, leader of the Socialist Party, is none other than J. S. Woodsworth, leader of the C.C.P. The leader of the Liberal Party is not in the cast of characters, but he is referred to as Middleton; his party called the Patriots.

The play has to do with the political control of the government of Canada exercised by Sir John Wesley Horn and a little St. James Street group in Montreal.

"Remember, for twenty-five years and more, every government in Canada has been made or unmade in this little room," says one of the group at a gathering in Sir John's home. "We've done it before and we can do it again."

To this home certain Senators come and the Prime Minister himself.

Of the Prime Minister, Lomer Hogg, one of the St. James Street group, says: "I don't trust Dickson. He's just run wild in these last five years, what with his national bank, his marketing act, this price control board, debt adjustment and God knows what. Downright socialism, I call it . . ."

"Yes, I'm afraid Dickson has gone too far," interjects Sir John.

"If we can't control the government we won't be in control of our own business pretty soon," replied Hogg. "Just think of it. You and Cruse and I, among us direct the policy of about a hundred of the biggest business concerns in the country, but we can't manage a fellow like Dickson. It's back somers."

"The trouble with Dickson is that he's rich himself," says Sir John. "He even financed his own election. It's rather more difficult to dictate to men with money than it is to men without."

"We had enough of prime ministers that don't have to come to us for the sines of war," Hogg goes on. "They get much too cocky. The country's going to the dogs. . . . And on top of it all, this fellow Dickson pushing through his socialist legislation in direct defiance of our instructions. His impossible . . . When he gets off on that track I always know he's some pig-headed fool who in his own head doesn't want to argue about. Don't worry. We'll settle his hash."

As the election approaches, the St. James Street group seek to thwart the growing strength of the C.C.P.-Socialist party by sending a skilled agent to induce the leader, McGregor, to give up and accept a sure cabinet post in a national government. McGregor refuses. They then "plant" a stenographer in McGregor's office, but she comes to admire McGregor's idealism and refuses to carry out the instructions of the man who had "planted" her. The climax comes when the skilled agent has the stenographer abducted and the stenographer and the agent are discovered in a secret room, which is being rifled by McGregor. Of course, at the election the agent, who has been stamped as the McGregor party is left in the cold, and St. James Street capitulates its file.

"The people are weak and foolish," McGregor says when it is all over. "But Horn and his ilk can't keep them in blindfolds for ever. They're easily frightened, easily swayed, bullied, cajoled, exploited until the hour strikes."

The play has some bright scenes, its melodrama may be milky, but it is avowedly C.C.P. propaganda and at that is pungent. It is an honest effort to present on the stage a criticism of our national politics from the radical point of view. C.C.P.-ers will be tickled with it; others may consider it political mileage. It has already been performed publicly by members of an amateur drama league in Toronto.

Author Irvine, born in Scotland, came to the Canadian prairies to farm in Wetsaskiwin, Alberta. He was elected to the House of Commons in 1921 for East Calgary; defeated in 1925 but re-elected in 1928 and 1930, as a United Farmer of Alberta representative. He is one of the vigorous radicals of the House.

English Revolution In Sport

NOEL COWARD used to console his compatriots for their defeats in international competitive sport by reminding them that: "Anyhow, we always win the Boat Race every year."

John Tunis, author of "Star-spangled England," points out in Esquire that things athletic have changed for England: no longer "an athletic rag doll kicked about by Americans and continental as she was after the war." He cites last year's British achievements—Cotton's record score in the British Open at Sandwich, the only Englishman to capture the title since Havers won in 1923; the victory of Fred Perry and Dorothy Round in the tennis singles at Wimbledon, a feat not accomplished for twenty-five years; the Leander crew's winning of the "Grand" by defeating Princeton at Henley; the humbling of Saracen and Kirkwood by Padgham and Brown in exhibition matches; England's Davis Cup victory in July; Oxford and Cambridge track meet triumph over Cornell and Princeton; finally, Perry's retention in United States of his title as American singles champion, thus establishing a record by winning the Australian, English and American championships in the same year.

"On the whole, the world has been going very well for us in England," commented Bernard Darwin, sports writer of The Times of London, on the year's record.

"That," now replies Tunis to Darwin, "surely takes the international understatement championship for 1934, when you consider that an Englishman was on top in nearly every form of sport from May to October."

CHANGE IN ATTITUDE

WHAT THIS AMAZING shift in athletic values on the part of a nation which from 1920 to 1930 did not exist in competitive international sport?

The story had been given that England's best athletes had been killed in the war. This, however, did not take into account the fact that leading French and German sportmen had also lost their lives in the war, and yet in the post-war decade these continental, as well as the less scarred Americans, were "cleaning up" on the English.

Tunis finds the real cause lies in the changing attitude towards games in the British Isles. Traditionally in England, there had been an idea that a man who played the game too well was—well, not quite a gentleman. Most Englishmen competed in several forms of sport, but they did not go for one sport intensively. That sort of thing was all right for foreigners, but not for the English. The religion of the record has never swept the nation. A close and continued attention to athletics was unfavorably regarded: one didn't do it.

The change is exemplified in the behavior of last season's title winners. Cotton trained faithfully in the intensive American manner. Perry actually played more tennis in 1934 than any American and does not drink or smoke. He and Miss Round were held up to the nation as model champions because they were total abstainers.

* * *

ANOTHER ASPECT of the change in British sport is pointed out. Oxford and Cambridge have been breeding grounds of sport, exercising a predominating influence on English athletics, not merely because they happened to nurture most of the athletes, but because of the class system. Perry, however, started tradition by learning his game in the public parks. He did not go to Eton or Winchester; he had no of the public school spirit. And Cotton, quite an ordinary chap, never went to university.

Curiously enough, these two super-champions, England's first in a long period, are not tremendously popular in their native land, just because they did not learn to play games at a university.

"Once the English start going into games in a big way, they are sure to win their share of victories," Tunis writes. "For in mind the English enjoy winning as much as anyone. Being a race of optimists they like to deny this, but it is a fact, nevertheless. When, therefore, they realize how much training, practice and concentration upon sport can do, theiratty ideals are likely to blossom in a crowd of record breakers and champions. Because the British Isles to-day are fairly teeming with thousands of natural athletes, whom good coaching would turn into world-beaters. There are witnesses they are beginning to get the necessary coaching."

Burton Rascoe Proves Study of Classics Can Be Exciting

IF THE size of literary outlines be to make the doings of long-dead writing men seem interesting, and even exciting, to present-day readers, Burton Rascoe's "Titans of Literature" has been an extremely successful book since its publication some months ago.

Other critics may disagree with some of Mr. Rascoe's appraisals, but he has at least managed to convey the feeling that grubbing about in ancient books can be one of the most enthralling and stirring of all pastimes. He makes the writings of the classics as our contemporaries, makes it possible for us to understand how they lived and what they tried to do; and that, it seems, is a very fine achievement.

His book is, in its essence, a series of biographical and critical essays on the masters of literature, from Homer to James Joyce. He keeps it very by a number of reverent but illuminating comparisons of old-time writers with those of to-day.

He says, for example, that Virgil was Rascoe's Major Guest, and that Shakespeare was very like George M. Cohen; that Juvenal was a foreunner of the modern newspaper columnist; and that many of the Latin poets were simply glorified public relations counsel.

Unorthodox at times—he has said use for Dante and Milton, for instance—Mr. Rascoe has written a book which is always interesting and frequently downright exciting. But while designed for popular consumption, his book is neither cheap nor superficial. It is published by Putnam.

No Barred Windows In Russian Prisons

SINCE everything else over there seems to be topsy-turvy, according to our standards, it is only natural that the prisons of Soviet Russia should reverse almost all our own rules.

A land where even a murderer can get only a maximum sentence of ten years, where most prisoners are entirely without bars or walls, where convicts can get furloughs to visit their families and where time-expired prisoners beg to be allowed to stay in prison—such a land, clearly, is a through-the-looking-glass sort of place entirely outside of our own experience.

There is an excellent description of Russia's penal system in "Soviet Russia Fights Crime," by Dante von Koerber. This woman, a German penologist, spent some months investigating Russian prison authorities, and in this book she tells what she found out.

Russia still has some prisons of the traditional type—"closed prisons," as they are called—for incorrigibles on whom the Communist leaven does not seem to be working. But most prisons are open, airy, comfortable, comfortable, comfortable. The four of them are governed largely by the penologists themselves.

In some cases, whole new towns have been founded, inhabited solely by prisoners. Prisoners take pride in their work, earn money, marry, become respected citizens—and, in the main, give this Soviet experiment a surprising measure of success.

It should be added, of course, that the political prisons are something else again.

German Workers Fail To Unite Even Against Nazis

KARL BILLINGER was one of those German Communists who tried to keep the party alive in Germany after Hitler came to power. Naturally, it was not long before he fell into the hands of the Storm Troopers.

What happened to him thereafter he describes in "Fatherland," which is about as shocking and harrowing a book as you are apt to read all year.

But if it were no more than an account of torture and brutality it would not be worth much attention. We have already had a vast number of books revealing the horrors of concentration camps. What makes Billinger's book valuable is the fidelity and intelligence with which he describes the reaction to these horrors of the men who suffered from them.

Most impressive of all, to this reviewer, was his revelation of the way in which doctrinal rivalries and jealousies could persist even in the face of torture. You would suppose that all working-class Soviets would unite under Hitler's hammering; yet even in the torture chambers the Communists and Social Democrats seemed to hate and distrust each other almost as much as their torturers.

Reading of this, you begin to understand how the German workers helped to bring Hitlerism to power, by reason of their lack of unity. They saw it all coming, but they were never able to get together on any plan to fight it. They preferred to fight each other. Now they are paying—very terribly, as this book makes dreadfully clear.

His Eighty Years Full Of Adventure

JOHN HAYS HAMMOND has had about as full and active a life as any living human being. His life, indeed, might have been designed especially to prove that the mining engineer has a romantic and eventful career. As his "Auto-Biography" just published, is a long and interesting affair.

Here is a man who was born in San Francisco ten years ago, when that exciting city was just reaching the full bloom of its gaudy youth.

He tramped about California in the day when the frontier still existed in all its most romantic guise; he knew the wild west intimately when it was at its wildest; he risked his life in lonely Mexican mine diggings, helped Cecil Rhodes to expand his empire in South Africa, saw the development of Siberia before the Russo-Japanese war, talked as an equal with kings and princes and presidents, heard sentence of death pronounced on him, amassed great riches and knew how to enjoy them—was there ever a life more packed with the incidents which we call romantic?

He is a man who was born in San Francisco ten years ago, when that exciting city was just reaching the full bloom of its gaudy youth. How did she learn about the lives of those with whom she peopled her story? During her visits at the farm of an uncle, whose tales of the farmer folks were enthralled her.

SPEAKS FOR NEGLECTED ONES

"I tried to speak for people who couldn't speak for themselves," the pretty, deep-eyed, solemn young author explains. "I wanted people to know how some of the world lives, and I hoped that they would realize that there are many active years, his story is a long one—20,000 to 25,000 words—and they're enthralling reading all the way."

You may not agree with some of his comments. He is a bit of a Tory in some ways. But you will find his book interesting. It is published by Farrar and Rinehart.</

Humor Sense Toronto-trained Girl Most Hated cActress Students' Stakes

It Gives Girls Something To Bank On

By PAUL HARRISON
FLORENCE McGEE is the most hated actress. And proud of it.

IF YOU WANT TO PLEASE a man, cultivate your sense of humor. For it is of more importance to you than a figure that would enslave Hollywood or a platinum halo around your puffed head. Men want women who will laugh with them. Men want women who will see something at which to laugh.

That is the consensus of answers to innumerable questions asked of distinguished literary men, psychologists, and scientists.

True, if your grandmother didn't put the golden spoon of humor in your mouth at birth, you are not especially blessed, but polish up what you have of laughter.

WIT AND IRONY LONG IN VOGUE

The advent of a recognized sophistication made many of us believe that it was smart to make a remark that blunged wit, or had an undercurrent of irony.

One girl went to New York with a mind filled with laughter. Not the noisy kind. Noise and mirth are not necessarily even remotely related. A quiet, understanding, merry laughter. But she found that the so-called sophisticates didn't laugh. She was afraid she would be criticized. So she tried to lock up her mirth. It took her a few years to learn that the people around her didn't laugh because they didn't know how.

Laughter will do more to tone up your soul than physician's pills or psychiatrists' teachings. It denotes a general relaxation. A more vocal sound is not a laugh. Mirth is an inner quality and you have to let the merriment come out.

BROADWAY SITS PROVE POINT

The success of recent Broadway productions which are erected on a platform of humor and mirth is one of the most outstanding proofs that people want to laugh, laugh, laugh. Not only want to, but need to!

There is "Three Men on a Horse." It is a simple story of three sporting gentlemen who take possession of a simple verse-writing man who has a wife, a home, and a good time.

"Broadway proves people want laugh, laugh, laugh!"

Laughs for choosing the winning horse. While he proves of Mother's Day and Easter in rhyme, they draw out lucky numbers. Night after night the audience is convulsed.

Or take "The Bishop Misbehaves," in which a high churchman has some good fun for himself by foiling the two young lovers. The audience is hilarious because the Bishop has a good time.

Oh, yes! There is "Political Fever," which has nothing but "Men want women who will laugh with them"

It—laughed most cleverly promoted, of course. The wireless operator, in the wilds of the north, entertains you in the good old-fashioned way with his antics when a man and woman, and later an old love, make their appearance. He hadn't seen a woman for more than two years. The audience really laughs.

VICE VERSA IS APPRECIABLE, TOO

MAX. Forget to be tense. This is the first step in the development of a sense of humor. Don't take your problems too seriously. Don't take your "transgressions too much to heart.

Laugh and go on!

That is the thing that men seek in women. And—if we may drop a hint to the interviewed gentlemen—it is also desirable in a man.

Dionne-styled Toys

JUST as people are beginning to luxuriate in the promises of spring, it is something of a shiver to learn that the toy people are looking forward only to next December. The Toy Fair is about to move into the Hotel McAlpine in New York, and there will gather the makers and buyers who dictate the young idea's amusements months in advance.

Forecasters calculate that the country's doll bill alone will be $35,000,000, with baby dolls accounting for most of it. Reason—the Dionne quintuplets. Factories are working overtime turning out dolls in sets of five. Likenesses of Eddie, Marie, Tremaine, Annette and Cecile are being produced in every medium from bath soap to china. Of course, too, there will be quintuplet accessaries, carriages, beds and the like.

Doll carriages will have brakes, streamlining, full cantilever springs and sun shades. Doll houses come with complete furnishings in period styles and have electric lights and door bells. There will be hundreds of styles in layettes, bassinets, high chairs and strollers. Yes, scales. A doll can gain or lose weight these days; they have made some that actually will drink milk from a bottle.

Irish Rule Argentine Not a Mason There

LONDON. THE IRISH may be just policemen in New York, but in the Argentine they are the real people, according to Monsignor Lyons, who has been lecturing in Dublin on Buenos Aires Eucharistic Congress.

There are now 250,000 Irish people in Argentina," said Mr. Lyons. The Irish there are more Irish than we are in Ireland and they are the aristocracy of the Argentine to-day. Irishmen there are all wealthy, but that has not spoiled them. The Irish priests in the Argentine are a model to the other priests there."

Mrs. Lyons said that Buenos Aires was the biggest Catholic centre in the world, and there was not a Protestant in it, and as for Communists, they were all "taking a holiday" while the Eucharistic Congress was on.

Florence McGee Likes Role That Sets Audiences Hissing and Booing Her

Miss McGee makes up for her imp-of-the-moment role.

She receives scolding letters from women who have seen her in the role of Mary Tifford, a fourteen-year-old boarding school child whom diabolical falsehoods wreck the lives of several people. Some of her correspondents admit coming to see the play again and again just for the emotional privilege of sitting there and hating Mary Tifford. A few members of the all-feminine matinee contingent have begged her to leave the cast lest her own soul be tainted by association with her stage personality.

UNDER BAN

AS VILLAINESS NO. 1 of the Broadway theatre, Miss McGee has contributed much to the play, which, by a poll of all drama critics, should have easily won the Pulitzer Prize. By the same authority, her performance is one of the most outstanding of the season, and unquestionably is foremost among juvenile characterizations.

But drama students who agree that "The Children's Hour" should win the Pulitzer Prize are much less certain that it actually will. The play has nothing to do with the Longfellow poem, and very definitely is not for children. In fact, it centres around an unprintable subject, and already has been denied access to the stages of England. There is little likelihood that it ever will be seen in Boston, or in cities of similar moral discretion, and it certainly never will be made into a movie. There are plenty of witnesses who will testify that the stature and majesty of the piece completely overshadow its central theme of abnormality. But such factors are not considered likely to win a jury composed of men like John Brakke and William Lyons Phelps.

QUOTE GROWN-UP

ALL OF WHICH fails to detract in the least from Mary Tifford's amazing unpopularity, and the fact that after several months, "The Children's Hour" still is playing to standing room only. When she leaves the theatre of a matinee afternoon or evening, it is to walk her way through a crowd of autograph seekers. These, incidentally, approach her intelligently, to ascertain whether she will be able to manage them.

On stage Miss McGee seems well fitted physically, for her fourteen-year-old role. A dressing-room close-up dispels the illusion. Though put a curse on them. Other people write her letters, begging her to assure them that she is not really like that off-stage.

Well, she is not. Not a bit of it. To begin with, she is not even a child. She is twenty-four years old, and for two years has been happily married to an artist named Byron Thomas. Some day she wants to have at least two children, and entertains no misgivings about whether she will be able to manage them.

On stage Miss McGee seems well fitted physically, for her fourteen-year-old role. A dressing-room close-up dispels the illusion. Though small, she is definitely adult. But for her straight, dark hair—which she cannot have wavy while the play is running—few strangers would recognize her outside the theatre. She is thoroughly genial, very frank, and has a pleasant voice quite unlike that of vicious little Mary Tifford.

TRUTH WILL OUT

SHE GAVE me tea and some chocolate cookies. "I am not much the domestic sort," she admitted. "Really doted cooking. I have enjoyed fixing up our house, though. And I like parties, especially dancing.

"My life history is not as much,

Born in South Africa, moved to a suburb of Toronto when I was three. I was mild and meek as a kid. Oh, very meek. A painfully good little girl in school, though a poor student. I still cannot spell or add."

Was there not some childish escapade, I asked—some falsehood or farce that might provide a parallel or contrast with her satanic stage role? Miss McGee thought hard and finally shook her head. "I am sorry," she said, in some embarrassment. "I guess I was just too timid to let it about anything."

"The most I can remember is that I was always in love with my two older sisters' beau. Always mooning about them, always trying to attract their attention. At fourteen, I had a desperate crush on the fellow who was coming to see my older sister. I would spend hours getting dressed. I would steal rouge and perfume. I would wear her sweet when I let him in the front door. I would spend the rest of the evening popping in and out so he could see me. But he never seemed to notice. That is really the reason I went on the stage: nobody paid me the slightest attention while my sisters were around."

FIRST VILLAIN

She went to the Margaret Eaton School of Expression dramatic school in the University of Toronto district. She played in stock, and one of her roles was the Wendy of "Peter Pan." She toured with Otto Skinner in a juvenile role that was all sweetness and light. She played sappy ingenue parts with the Provincetown Theatre, and in another rural engagement in Suffern, N.Y.

She appeared on Broadway in three little plays which endured a total of seven weeks. One was an atrocious drag-me called "Mahogany Hall," in which she was a sort of sordid ingenue, longing for the finer things of life. It was probably the worst play of last season, but Miss McGee was so much above it that the play itself that Herman Shumlin remembered her when he decided to produce "The Children's Hour." She straightened her hair, scrubbed off her rouge, donned a middy blouse and flat-heeled shoes, dodged through Broadway alleys and climbed eleven flights of stairs to avoid the jibes of theatrical friends, read the part—and got the job.

To day she is Villainess No. 1. And proud of it.

Girls Now Realize College More Than Prelude To Adulthood

BY A CO-ED

IT IS a healthy, happy, forward sign that girls in our colleges are coming to a realization that they, as well as their male contemporaries, must take out a stake in the future.

Educators are announcing that both boys and girls are studying economics and the political sciences with increasing personal interest. Students, realizing that they will be definitely drawn into the configurations and economic upheavals of nations, are using college as a place of preparation and understanding, not as a prelude to adulthood.

WANT TO HAVE THEIR SAY

STUDENTS, girls as well as boys, are looking down the future. They are not visualizing a happy road to Rome as their parents and grandparents did. They have changed their viewpoint. They are demanding the privilege of saying what will happen in this world in which they must live and work.

Campuses have been the scenes of anti-war demonstrations. Youth was not trying to make a spectacle of itself and win popularity. It does not want war, it does not want to sacrifice its talents and abilities, its chance for love and success and happiness, for the opportunity of wearing a uniform and knocking down men like nine-pins, with a dash of blood and general human disfigurement, to make it war.

Youth to-day is not afraid to band together to proclaim its beliefs and intentions.

PLAY PICTURES YOUTH'S FLIGHT

IN PERFECT harmony with this collegiate trend, there is in the east a current theatrical production, "Flowers of the Forest," by John van Druten, in which Katherine Cornell and an able cast demonstrate youth's hatred and reasons for hatred of war.

Two boys march out to Flanders. Neither one comes back. One goes hating war and its brutal massacre of life and vision. He is not afraid to fight. But he stands with that campus army of to-day who have a great idealism. At first, the second boy who is a poet, believes that there is gallantry in battle. He, too, has idealism, though it is the antithesis of the first lad's. But when life becomes mud spattered, blood cluttered, dismantled, he decides that there is only cordialism anywhere, in life or death. Living, as well as dying, is useless, he proclaims.

Men and women of twenty years ago picked up broken skins and went on with their weaving. It was hard to do when there was so little interest in the finished product.

Richard Newton-Cleare, the young poet of the drama, played by Hugh Williams, brings no idealism when he comes home on furlough. He wants no sons to carry on his name. He would save them from a fate such as his. Not until he is dying does he come again to a belief in love and beauty and nobility.

WALKING BACKWARD TOWARD WAR

THE WORLD trembles to-day with the echo of marching feet. Armed neutrality walks backward to war. Walks backward, so the boys and girls beyond the campus refuse to hear guns, drop bombs, sink ships. The two English lads of the play, like most of the other students in the cast, are of slender physique, thin, gaunt, with faces of the boys of today, who might have been their sons—if they had wanted sons.

A little poem came from the last war. We quoted it profusely and felt realistic and reborn. "Flanders Fields," it was called. It represented a fallen army throwing its torch to the living. "If ye break faith with us who die, we shall not sleep." the post sang.

So the war went on. But it didn't bring peace. Merely a suspension of fighting. Not until the whole world attains that mental adulthood, that maturity of purpose which college students to-day are seeking, will there be a final fulfillment of the message of peace which angels sang early one morning above a town called Bethlehem.

Take Your Fish Along

From a Correspondent

A COUPLE of the swankier stores in the east are offering, at a good many dollars, special traveling cases for pet fish. They look like elegant over-night cases but contain glass tanks. Also special compartments for food, nets, thermometers and whatever other accessories are required.

The other day I discovered something equally novel in the way of furniture. This was a combination chair and dog house. You sit in the chair, and Pooh-choo-woochy crochets below in the kennel, peering out between your ankles. I do not know what useful purpose is served by all this, unless it is to assuage the feelings of dogs which are always being kicked out of chairs.

Callipygian Contest

From a New York Correspondent

AMONG the optional activities of a reporter of the scrambled Gotham scene is the attendance upon such memorabilia as ice-skating contests, kissing marathons, spaghetti-eating races and jumping-bean sweepstakes.

The other day it was a callipygian contest. "Callipygian" is a word in good standing, of Greek derivation, and means shapely—ah—hips. Well, not exactly hips, but the region where ladies need to be buster.

Recently some stymologist among the newest people discovered "callipygian," and they have been employing it profitably ever since as a descriptive of what corsets do to the feminine form.

They have, however, corrupted the definition to "flat rear profile"—a liberty which probably would have distressed the ancients Greeks.

MEASURING UP

ANOTHER day there was a contest, with sixteen showgirl participants who had only the vaguest idea of the meaning of callipygian, and with three judges who had opinions if not definite standards of measurement. As soon as the young ladies appeared in their one-piece bathing suits, the photographers lost all concern with the true meaning of the affair, and spent their time delightfully snapping front views of the chorines. The rest of us, on more spectator, sat around and enjoyed the show.

It was an attraction, after all, held on the stage of the Paradise Cabaret. With creative restraint the management had entered only one from the Paradise chorus. But Sally St. James, who dances there in the evenings, was present in the role of hostess. She was dressed in a gown of crimson, which included (she told me) five petticoats, a skirt-clipped corset and a gown of sheer "silks." Her waist was encircled by a narrow twenty-two inches. I wanted to say that I saw her and her look so charming, but refrained for fear she might not consider "flat rear profile" a compliment. After all, Miss Macrea earns $2,000 a week by this kind of show.

Margery Gayle Hoffman, an actress, 21, girl who has made good in several Broadway musical comedies, was the callipygian winner. Later she confessed to a woman reporter that she never has worn a corset.

FURTHER interesting exhibits are a valuable Venetian instrument made by J. A. Reff in 1881. English and Dutch instruments, the clavichord—now coming into use again—and the clavichord belonging to Johann Sebastian Bach, the instrument for which he wrote his "Well-Tempered Clavier," preludes and fugues in all the major and minor keys.

PARENTHOOD DELAYED TO SAVE JOBS

A POTENTIAL MOTHER may hesitate to ask for an extended leave of absence when she does not know what her employer's reaction will be. Since there are innumerable families in which a woman's salary cheque is needed to supplement her husband's income if the household is to be maintained comfortably—or even at all, sometimes—many women dare not risk the loss of their jobs. Therefore, these women may continue to work beyond the time at which they should be relieved of economic strain; they endanger their own health, the health of the unborn children, and may cause their husbands such an emotional strain that their joy in parenthood will be dimmed or extinguished.

If a woman cannot return to her job when she has recovered she may suffer from frustration. If the job is a necessity, she will lament the comforts of which the family is deprived. If the job was a loved profession she will resent the society that will not let her enjoy the happiness of work merely because she is a mother.

ALTERNATIVE IS BAD, ALSO

A WOMAN MAY adopt the other alternative and have no children. This too, is bad, if she and her husband desire them. Or she may wait until late to have them or to marry. Since authorities agree that early marriage is conducive to child-bearing, and many young people need the double income, as we have said, a maternity leave will promote younger parenthood.

The custom of permitting a woman to continue her professional or business life, if she so desires, has another benefit that is not economic. When a man and woman both work outside the home, each brings a freshness and vigor of experience and interest which can be pooled to prevent boredom. There is nothing more tiresome to a man than kitchen talk.

Willie Winkle

Last week my boy friend Johnny brought a piece of hemlock about ten inches long to manual training. It was off a limb and he said he had to make a bird's house as part of his Boy Scout training. He put it up in his backyard near his bedroom window.

When we saw what he was doing, Dick, Eric and I thought we'd like to make bird houses in our spare time at manual and we asked Johnny to bring us some wood if he had any more. Our manual training teacher said it would be alright for us to do it.

So this week Johnny came to manual with a limb of a tree over his shoulder, but on his way he dropped it and it broke in one place so there wasn't enough wood for Eric to get his piece. We cut the limb up into pieces ten inches long and they were about three inches in diameter.

We were sure lucky not having to use a rip saw and have to rip the pieces of wood. Our teacher showed us how to split it straight down the middle. Then we got gouges and we hollowed out the two split pieces of wood in the centre but we did nothing to both ends as that would have prevented them being waterproof.

When we got them hollowed out we got a brace and an inch-bit and bored a hole in the centre. Then we took the two pieces and fitted them together in their natural positions and got some wire and fastened them together. You mustn't nail them 'cause you've got to be able to take the house to pieces next year so you can clean it out and put flea powder in it and make it nice and sweet for the birds to come back and build their nests again. You know, just like you do with your own bed. Not many of us would want to sleep between the same sheets or blankets very long or you'd be like the soldiers in the war and have lots of little cooties crawling around on you.

This inch-hole we bored is the front door and we made a door-step out of a piece of thin wood. Now the birds can land on the doorstep, look inside and decide whether they want to make nests in our bird houses. They are just about as natural as any bird house you'll see.

I'm going to fix my bird-house near the kitchen window so I can see my birds build their nest and hatch their young. Johnny is a great kid for building bird cages and watching birds. He collects eggs and knows everything about birds. He says he's going to be a naturalist when he grows up.

* * * * *

Johnny has got bird-houses he's made all over the garden but the one he made last week he put in the tree outside his bedroom window. He hadn't much sooner put it there than two ordinary swallows came along and started to build their nests. They looked Jealous, it did, and the next day finished their nests. English swallows that came here after they were liberated at Began making their funny noise around Johnny's place. The English swallows, so Johnny says, eat the ordinary swallows' eggs and destroy the nests. If the English swallows come around after the ordinary swallows' eggs are hatched the English ones do such a lot of chattering that they make the other swallows go crazy. So when the swallows that had taken up their home in Johnny's new bird-house heard the English swallows they left at once.

* * * * *

I'm hoping that the swallows won't be too fussy when they look inside my bird-house. You see Johnny broke the last gouge he was using. It smoothed off the rough edges but I couldn't take my rough edges off and the birds may not find it quite as comfortable.

I like this kind of bird-house better than the one I made last year. I built it according to my own ideas 'cause I hadn't met a naturalist like Johnny. I got a Japanese orange box, painted it green, put a shingle roof on it, had ventilators and a good, big front door with a wide doorstep and lots of straw inside. Then I put wheat in a pan, water and bread crumbs, and I thought I'd got something that ought to bring robins, swallows or anything else that flew. Well, I got crows, alright, and some seagulls came around and got the bread but I never got a bird to rent my house. They simply wouldn't fall for it.

But this new kind of a bird-house looks like the real thing, right in the limb of a tree. You can bet that I'm going to be very noisy from now on watching to see if my bird-house is going to have any tenants this year.

"THE KING AND QUEEN"

Here we have Bertie Davidson, aged two, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Davidson, and Alice Johnson, aged three, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. Johnson, who received the first prize for the youngest couple at the children's fancy dress ball held at Ladyman's to celebrate the King's silver Jubilee. The children, who are cousins, represented Their Majesties. They are grandchildren of Mr. and Mrs. D. Johnson of Ladyman, and little Bertie is the granddaughter of Mrs. E. Bored Prince Forsook Royalty To Become Actor

Portrait of Baby in Gem-laden Clothes Increased Fame of Artist

IT'S ALL very well to be born with a golden spoon in your mouth, but when it comes to having your swaddling clothes heavy with precious gems, riches get to be somewhat of a burden. At least that is how the baby in to-day's painting looks as he lies there so helpless, bound by his golden gem-encrusted trappings.

At the top of the picture is painted, in Italian: "Federigo of Urbino, born 1452." His full name is Federigo Umberto Guiseppe, but his doting parents, who were magnificent and wealthy rulers, called him Rigo. That is the "small name" for Rigo, which in turn is the "small name" for Federigo. The painting was made shortly after his birth, which took place at near-by Pesaro.

GIVEN A LAVISH START IN LIFE

The cortège conveying the infant to the splendid ducal palace in Urbino was like a scene from a fairy tale. Twelve youths dressed in gold embroidered turquoise brocade and twenty-four little boys dressed in gold and white brocade met the cavalcade and carried the baby-prince in a gorgeous chair through flower-carpeted streets to the palace. The public baptism was one of the most costly celebrations of that lavish time. Dances, spectacles, feasts were given the people. The duchy went mad with joy. Little did they think—but that is getting ahead of the story.

With such a glorious start in life, you would think that Federigo would be inspired toward a glorious career.

His father, Duke Francesco Maria II, and his mother, Livia della Rovere, had great hopes for his future. They were so proud of him that they called in the famous artist Baroccio to have the baby princeling painted in his baptismal robes. Baroccio did other portraits of the heir as he grew older, but this one which hangs to-day in the Pitti Gallery of Florence is the most famous.

There is something appealing about this baby so weighted down with riches that he cannot move. We wonder if the artist realized that he was painting a moral lesson in this portrait. Federigo had everything to make him contented, happy, popular—but he was destined to be a tragic figure.

Perhaps, after all, Federigo was a foolish, over-indulged, pampered

child, destined to be a failure.

He was, however, destined to be an actor. He was the first titled person on record to be so stage struck that he cast his lot with a group of players. Horror-stricken chroniclers

all his life his parents never corrected him. Some boys and girls may think he was lucky, but it doesn't always work out that way. Federigo didn't want to study, so his indulgent father neglected to train him for his ducal responsibilities. Instead of a great ruling prince, this lovely baby grew up, utterly spoiled, arrogant, uncontrollable. He had but one law—his wish to be denied NEVER! Historians say unkind things about Federigo, but it doesn't seem that he had a chance with such a foolish father always indulging him until the boy was surfeited.

Perhaps, after all, Federigo was a

foolish, over-indulged, pampered

child, destined to be a failure.

He was, however, destined to be an actor. He was the first titled person

on record to be so stage struck that

he cast his lot with a group of

players. Horror-stricken chroniclers

of his time say that he actually appeared in the public streets unmasked with them—and ultimate breach of regal etiquette—he acted himself! Just a poor bored prince who turned out to be a theatrical angel. Way back in 1523 he financed a company.

BORN A PRINCE—DIED A "TROUPER"

Actors in those days were rated almost at the bottom of the social scale, so Federigo's preference for their society was a scandal. And most important, he had been married the year before to Claudia of the great house of Medici. Federigo was only eighteen when he married her, and she was a single lion in the cloth he was painting without seeing it. His debut work was perfect. His pictures ranged from religious scenes to portraits. What hopes and romantic thrills young Claudia must have had when she looked at the beautiful prince awaiting her at the Tuscan border! But Federigo preferred pageants of another sort. Even when their baby Vittoria was born he wouldn't leave the player folk. And one night after a performance and a wild party he was found dead. He was only eighteen and he had cast away a great dukedom to be a "trouper."

Baroccio, the artist, lived to be seventy-four—quite a contrast. But he worked hard and was never over indulged. His portrait of Federigo illustrates perfectly the character of this little Prince. He was, so evidently, a good boy, but he was a single lion in the cloth he was painting without seeing it. His debut work was perfect. His pictures ranged from religious scenes to por-

Uncle Wiggily

By HOWARD R. GARIS

Jimmie Wibblewobble was getting very proud of himself. As we remember, the little boy duck wanted to learn to stay under water a long time and perhaps swim beneath it as Toodle and Noodle Flat-Tail, the beaver boys, did.

So Jimmie began practicing. Each day he would hold his head under the water of the Duck Pond. At first he couldn't hold it very long but by keeping at it he got to the point where he could tip himself up with his tail in the air, his webbed feet paddling to hold himself this way and his yellow bill close to the bottom of the pond. Ducks feed this way, pulling up weeds and grass from the shallow bottoms of ponds.

Sometimes when Jimmie had his head under water he was eating the sweet grass and weeds from the bottom. At other times he was just practicing, holding his breath and getting ready for the time when he could dive and swim beneath the surface like the beavers.

"Will you come and watch me, Uncle Wiggily?" quacked Jimmie one day to the rabbit gentleman. "Bring your watch and time me—see how long I can keep my head under water."

RATHER SILLY?

"All right, Jimmie, I'll do that," said Mr. Longears. "But don't you think it's rather silly for a duck to try to be like a beaver?"

"Oh, no, thank you!" quacked Jimmie. "I'm sure I can do it." You see, as I told you, he was rather proud and that isn't a good thing for ducks. That is, not to be too proud.

So Uncle Wiggily got his watch and went to the Duck Pond to time Jimmie. As the rabbit gentleman neared the pond he heard Jimmie saying to his sister Alice:

"I can keep my head under water longer than any duck in the world!"

"Don't be silly!" laughed Alice.

"Well come on, I'll have a race with you," offered Jimmie. "I can keep my head under water longer than any duck in two worlds."

"Oh, Jimmie!" quacked Lulu, the other sister. "You shouldn't be so boastful!"

"I know what I can do," said Jimmie. "I'll race you both. I can keep my head under water longer than any duck in three worlds."

"My! My!" thought Uncle Wiggily as he hurried on with his watch to time Jimmie. "That little duck boy is certainly proud."

When Uncle Wiggily reached the edge of the pond he saw Lulu and Alice standing on the edge looking at their brother.

"Hold the watch and time me," I wanted Lulu and Alice to sort of race with me to see who could hold their heads under longest, but they won't."

NOT A BEAVER YET

"Well, Jimmie, let's see what you can do," said Mr. Longears. "But be careful. You aren't a beaver yet, by a long way."

Jimmie tilted himself up with his tail in the air, his beak down under water and his feet paddling. A quarter-minute was ticked off on the watch, then a half-minute. Then nearly a minute. Jimmie's feet were paddling faster and his wings were flapping.

"He's staying under too long!" shouted Uncle Wiggily. "No duck can stay under that long! Something must have happened to the rescue! Come on, Lulu and Alice! We'll rescue Jimmie!" Though not a good swimmer, into the water splashed the rabbit. Lulu and Alice swam out to their brother and, with the help of Uncle Wiggily pulled him up so his head was in the air. Jimmie was breathing hard.

"I got my bill stuck in the mud!" he quacked. "I tried to pull myself up for I couldn't breathe any more. But I was stuck."

"Well, I'm glad we unstuck you," said Lulu. After that Jimmie didn't try any more tricks. And if the electric fan doesn't blow the cork out of the bottle of ketchup, I'll tell you next about Uncle Wiggily's spring clothing.

Childhood's Days

In memory's clear mirror, beloved forms are seen.

That take me back to childhood through years that intervene,

To Sally and Lee and the Bumble-bee, Cliffy and Bill with me;

Good comrades we, in those days so free, light-hearted as children be.

Scrambling o'er mossy hills in spring, for lilies and purple bells;

Chattering the while of anything—or secrets one never tells;

Returning with lusty voices, shouting in eager glee:

"We are so hungry, Mother, what have you got for tea?"

There are many lambs in Rexie's fields; old Juno has seven pups;

Cutest puppies we've ever seen; there are millions of buttercups;

Covering fields like a cloth of gold, reminding us of the tale you told

One rainy day by the wide hearth fire, of Midas's touch and his heart's desire.

Then Mother smiled at each eager child. "You're happy, far," said she,

"Than a king of old with his greed for gold, for yours is true liberty;

Take now your fill, Cliff, Win and Bill, and you, little Bumble-bee;

Of the joy that is yours in the great outdoors; grown-ups you will some day be."

So Brother Cliff, gay Sally, with me, Billy and Lee and thy Bumble-bee,

Spent many a day in this pleasant way or romped in the hay-loft wide;

Picnicking oft at Cadboro Bay, homing at eventide,

In a "ching-chong" way, merry and gay, with spoils from loved seaside.

RATTLESNAKES REQUIRE ABOUT FIVE SECONDS TO COIL AND STRIKE!

THE SUN'S RAYS CONTAIN ELECTRICITY.

RATTLESNAKES cannot strike instantly, as is generally believed. Observations show that it takes, on an average, five seconds for them to get enough kinks in their bodies to deliver a blow.

The ink man's horse stood very still and didn't start to balk until a gnome jumped to the driver's seat and shouted, "Hop aboard!"

Up went his feet, high in the air. This gave the Twymies quite a scare. "Oh, gee, I will not ride behind that old nag," Duney roared.

"He's just as wild as he can be. He'll wreck the wagon. Not for me! I think I'd rather keep both of my feet upon the ground."

"Now wait!" exclaimed the ink man. "You will shortly see what I can do. I'll speak to my pet horse, and then you'll all be safe and sound."

The Twymies watched him as he walked up to the horse and calmly talked. "Now, listen here," he said. "You shouldn't kick around like this."

SCIENCE AND INVENTION

Sunbaths Brighten Baby's Future Outlook

Whatever the family's circumstances, in good weather there is no reason for depriving baby of sunbaths. Olive Roberts Barton here discusses how to protect baby from the dangers of sunburn.

BY OLIVE ROBERTS BARTON

WE HAVE become sun-conscious regarding babies and little children. Cod liver oil has to pinch-hit for Sol during the winter and makes a good substitute in its way, but the mother of a baby or an under-par child watches the sky and thermometer impatiently in May to see when she can begin those sun baths, strip the children and put them out to ripen like tomatoes.

We know now that certain vitamins are absolutely essential to health and therefore life.

First of all, unless she has had exercise (and even then I urge it is best for the mother to talk the matter over with the doctor), the duration of the exposure should not be a matter of guess work, because sunlight is dangerous if overdone.

The first sun 'bath' should be very brief, as little as five minutes. Increase in periods should be very, very slow. If it is cool outside, or windy, the baby can have his bed wheeled up to an open, sunny window. Glass stops the beneficial rays. But I would not give the first bath on either a very cool or windy day, even though the room is heated. Better to choose favorable all-round weather conditions.

KEEP EYES AWAY FROM SUN

The buggy or play-yard on a protected porch is usually most convenient. Always keep a small baby's eyes away from the sun. Face him away from it, but let him lie right in a patch of sunlight.

It will not be long until our heavily vitamin-dispenser will overdo his job, especially at mid-day. When that happens the best time to curb him is after 11 o'clock and after 3 o'clock.

On boiling days just keep baby in the shade. Our business then is not to cook him but to cool him. When a baby or a little child once gets used to the sun, he can stand more, but the "altogether" sun-bath is seldom given over an hour at most. If the doctor recommends it, it can be given twice a day.

MOST ARE SUN-STARVED

The entire matter, I think, depends on the mother's good judgment, especially in tricky spring weather. She will watch to see that there is no danger of catching cold. She will take advantage of the least-windy hours. Direct drafts will be discouraged by screens or by hanging blankets around the bed. If the baby sunbathes easily on account of a super-delicate skin, she will harden him more slowly than his thicker-skinned brother.

But let us give thanks for the sun. We all need it, young and old. Most of us right now are sun-starved.

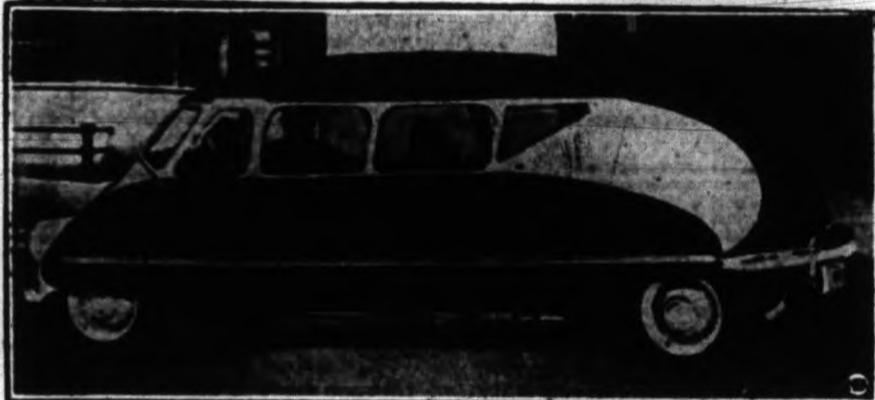

In a six-hour period, the tide brings in as much water in the Bay of Fundy as falls in the form of rain over the entire United States in a week.

British Troops Sample Gas During Manoeuvres

Demonstrations of chemical and anti-gas defence are frequently held at the anti-gas wing of the Small Arms School, Winterbourne Gunner, Salisbury, where army instructors are training. Above we see soldiers marching through a chemical smoke screen while in training. Afterwards they will be sent to the various depots and centres through the British Isles to instruct in gas defence.

Cold Cathode Tube Invention Opens Way To World Television

AS A RESULT of contracts just signed at Philadelphia with representatives of the Hitler government, and involving Germany, Austria, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Poland and Switzerland, world television has taken a leap forward towards actuality through the genius of a young San Francisco inventor.

The agreements made are between Dr. Paul Götsche, director of television and broadcasting for the German government and directorate factor of the Farnsworth Company of Berlin, and Philo Farnsworth, San Francisco inventor and central figure of the Farnsworth Television Inc.

Recognition of the Farnsworth invention, the famous cold cathode tube, by the German interests, according to radio men, means that these inventions will dominate in television throughout the world.

SIX WEEKS' SURVEY

The sign-up by the Hitler representatives for television on a big scale followed a six weeks' investigation in this country of all television systems, and a previous survey by the German interests of all that Europe had to offer.

Under license granted Germany by young Farnsworth, the German license will go to the cold cathode diode tube in all television work in the countries named.

Dr. Götsche indicated that an extensive series of public demonstration of television have been planned in Germany for this summer, at which the Farnsworth tube, which completely supplants the early type of disk scanner will be used. The tube functions both for transmitting and receiving and represents nine years of laboratory work in this country to bring it to commercial perfection.

HOME RECEPTION

The German interests plan the immediate building of transmitting and receiving sets for television reception, paralleling television introductions which have been planned in England by British interests this fall. Specialty erected stations and the compilation of apparatus for theatre and home reception will be among the first step of the new licensed group.

New high-powered ultra-short-wave equipment has been installed on Broken Mountain in the Hells and will be completed next month. There broadcasting will be shortly started. It is understood, using the new Farnsworth cold cathode receiver, which placed on the market for public use to sell at approximately R.M. 600.

Farnsworth started work on his tube when a high school youth. For the past three years he has been conducting his experiments at the "Phileco" plant in Philadelphia. His television tube won scientific acclaim in a showing at the Franklin Institute. Its most sensational feat was the picking up of distant starlight and a transmission of the star picture to a receiver screen for laboratory visitors.

FOR YEARS it has been noted that cancer seems to run in families, but modern studies have shown that for the more usual types of tumors which are widely distributed, it is of little significance.

In a recent review of the subject, a specialist points out that certain unusual types of cancer seem to be quite definitely inherited.

There is the case of one family in which ten or sixteen children had a certain unusual form of a tumor of the retina, the tissue at the back of the eye. The parents in this family did not have these tumors, but an uncle on the father's side did die from the same malady as affected these children.

There is also the case of twins, in which there seems to be a hyper-sensitivity of the skin, so that under the influence of light there is inflammation leading to malignant changes.

Undoubtedly all human beings vary in their amount of resistance to cancer, and in the amount of susceptibility or likelihood that exists in them to the development of new growths.

While these studies do not definitely fit the cause of cancer, they add a great deal to our knowledge of the way in which it develops and thereby increase the eventual likelihood of control.

HEREDITY, ENVIRONMENT BOTH CANCER CAUSES

Evidence Proves Dread Disease Is Spread in Some Families as Well as by Modes of Life or Unusual Habits

New Generator Heaviest Load

THE GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY is forwarding what is believed to be the heaviest load ever transported on a single car. The load consists of a generator shaft, rotor and pole for 26,000-kilowatt frequency converter set, weighing 567,000 pounds. It has been manufactured at Schenectady for the Consolidated Gas, Electric Light and Power Company, and will be shipped completely assembled to the Potomac Electric Light and Power Company at Kennington, D.C. The converter will be used to deliver 25-cycle single-phase power to the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Through routing will require the use of the tracks of the Delaware and Hudson, Pennsylvania and the Western Maryland railways. The clearance over the regular routes between Schenectady and Bennington is limited by the dimensions of the tunnels in the city of Baltimore. Several months of negotiations were necessary before plans could be developed to move the machine without disassembly. All routes between the shipping point and the destination were checked, and the route with the greatest clearance had been selected. A check of practically every foot of the way was made to determine if the dimensions of temporary constructions could be made to allow the load to pass. In order to transport the load from Schenectady to Wilkes-Barre, Pa., a special train movement will be resorted to. The load will be taken from point to point only when northbound traffic can be avoided. All cars will have to be cleared from sidings, and switch lamps and even switch stands must be removed in certain instances.

From Wilkes-Barre the load will move to Hagerstown, Md., by way of the Pennsylvania, where it will be turned over to the Western Maryland Railway. After an extensive detour it will be delivered back to the Pennsylvania south of the Baltimore tunnel, whence it will be carried to the customer's siding at Bennington. Not only was it necessary to check the height and width clearance through bridges, tunnels and underpasses, but also examine the roadbed, bridge and culvert strength along the entire route because of the extremely heavy concentration of weight on the rails. Even for movement over the customer's aidings, shoring-up and re-aligning of tracks was necessary.

The dimensions of the load when skidded, covered, braced and placed on the car will be seventeen feet above the rails with a 13½-foot width. There are only six cars in the country of the right type and capacity to carry the loading. Car NYC-499041, which will be used, is equipped with two four-axle trucks. It alone weighs 104,300 pounds and has a capacity of 200 tons, making a total weight on the rails of 471,300 pounds.

Curious Trees

I THINK one of the most curious trees I have ever seen is the electricity tree which one occasionally comes across in the forests of Central India. The leaves of this tree are of a highly sensitive nature, and as full of electricity that whoever touches them receives an electric shock. It has a very singular effect upon a magnetic needle, and will influence it at a distance of even seventy feet.

The electrical strength of the tree varies according to the time of day, it being strongest at midday, and weakest at midnight. In wet weather its powers disappear altogether. Birds never approach the tree, nor have insects ever been seen upon it.

I was especially interested in the process one sees going on frequently in the Nepal jungles of one tree devouring another. The devourer in this case is the "maya" or "cotton tree," whose seeds are dropped by birds in other trees, and are sometimes caught in their forks, where they occasionally germinate and drop a sort of root, which also occasionally takes hold and starts a cotton tree branch. This spreads itself and drops other roots until a large stem of the victim tree is seized, when the devourer gradually gets hold of and spreads round its main trunk, until it is finally swallowed up and killed, a fine cotton tree standing in its place, showing a conspicuous smooth white bark, and a curiously shaped trunk.

The Escape-proof Handcuffs

Combined handcuffs and harness designed to prevent a prisoner from escaping by holding his arms so close to his body that he cannot balance himself to run.

THE FACT that a man's arms are of great importance as an aid in running suggested to Guy E. Lombard, a turnkey, of Portland, Maine, an idea for making a new type of "escape-proof" handcuffs, designed to prevent prisoners from making a "getaway" while being transferred from their cells to the courtroom.

The demonstration of these handcuffs shows how a prisoner's arms are securely held so close to his body that he is unable to balance himself to run.

Inside Apartments To Get Sunlight

LIGHT sources as effective as the sun and considerably more constant, have begun to illuminate the dark doings of apartment-dwellers in a building on Central Park South, New York. New Yorkers who face the ventilating shafts and windows apartments are in the lower levels of the fourteen-story building have long since ceased to hope that sunlight would come streaming through to the bottom of their particular "well," but to these under-privilaged rooms Clinton E. Smith, a consulting engineer at 415 Lexington Avenue, has brought a new sensation.

On his inspiration General Electric engineers mounted eighteen standard floodlights at the ninth floor level in two of the ventilating shafts. The lights will be operated from eight to twelve hours a day, depending on the season, and will be especially advantageous on dark, gloomy days. Tests conducted at the apartment house to-day showed that with the window shades halfway down, the similarity to natural sunlight was startling.

The engineers too, were thoughtful of the tenants' feelings. When the switch is thrown no end-of-the-world-like paralysis unmasks house-holders in the act of brushing their teeth or doing sit-ups exercises, pastimes which were formerly cloaked in intimate gloom. A fully automatic synchronous-motor time switch operates a motor-operated dimmer, and the floodlights do not attain their full brilliancy for fifteen minutes. Thus even the artificial suns take their time about rising over the ninth-floor horizon.

Six floodlights were used on one shaft measuring 12 by 15 feet, and twelve lights on another rectangle shaft that is 12 by 20 feet. The installation was made possible by the Bowery Savings Bank, which has taken over the building.

For twenty years after their discovery, the male and female Williamson's capuchins were recorded by ornithologists as separate species.

Patou Acclaims Glamour of New Blouses

Creator Shows Wide Range of the Mode

Patou favors white chiffon blouses for his feminine formal afternoon suits. The model below introduces minute hand-tucks and fine lace as a trimming factor. The hat is white glass fabric trimmed with black satin.

By JEAN PATOU
PARIS.

THE EVER-INCREASING diversity of blouses and their now definitely established place for every hour of the day in the smart woman's wardrobe, makes it almost impossible to say whether a two-piece dress should still be called a dress or whether it should be placed in the blouse and skirt category.

On the other hand, we label "tailleur de cocktail" a formal afternoon ensemble which boasts a bodice or blouse with daring transparency effects, because it is worn with a hat which places it in the class of daytime clothes. Then again, there are some dresses with totally transparent bodices, which are very becoming, and yet palliates supports the idea of an independent blouse that are worn with a long, supple and sinuous skirt.

TAILORED BLOUSE FOR MORNINGS

These are the more fantastic uses to which the mode places blouses or blouse tops this season. Otherwise the blouse in its more conventional aspects also has acquired an indisputable place.

Thus for morning wear or to complete the rough tweed sports suit, the tailored, almost masculine shirt blouse is still the correct complement. These should be fashioned of foulard, or heavy crepe or satin, in monotones or prints as desired.

Then comes the dresser blouse—to accompany the afternoon suit and ensemble. Here fantasy reigns supreme. The combination of georgette or chiffon with lace, crepe or satin affords the widest scope for the creator's imagination, with design and cut as subtle and studied as in any formal gown.

LACES GIVE FEMININE TOUCH

Real Alencon lace or hand-made guipure appear this season to impart the ultra-feminine touch which I have endeavored to achieve throughout my collection. This type of blouse I usually place on a fitted satin slip, in a soft, but light color, thus marking a contrast with the tint of the lace itself and revealing the fineness of the pattern.

Cocktail blouses are several degrees more sumptuous than those mentioned above. They are made of silk, satin, or rayon, with delicate embroidery or lace. They are often sheer, as sheer organza. If the skirt and blouse happen to be black or navy, I think the blouse or bodice in the same colored chiffon with touches of glittering embroidery or paisley excessively smart, but then, so are blouses offering a direct color contrast.

Dorothy Dix's Letter Box

DEAR MISS DIX—I will prove to you beyond a doubt that women are spiritually, mentally and physically inferior to men. No one will deny that women has less physical strength than man, so I will pass on to the question of her mental inferiority. This is easily proved by listening to a group of women talking. They are gossiping about their neighbors, backbiting their friends, talking scandal, clothes, bragging about their children. If women wish to be considered intelligent, why don't they show intelligence when they are together?

Women are certainly inferior spiritually to men. They have been the cause of all the evil and trouble since the world began. The Bible tells how the first woman forced the apple on to a poor trusting man, just as the modern bride forces her cast-iron pie-crust, leather pancakes and other gastronomic atrocities on to her goodly victim.

Men are superior to women in being fair and honest. When a woman gets married she expects her husband to be good-looking, a good worker and intelligent. No man can possibly be three men in one, and that shows how unattractive a woman is.

But a man is fair. He well knows that no woman can be perfect and he doesn't expect perfection in his wife. He takes her as she is and makes the best of it.

Don't you think I have proved my point?

Answer: Well, no, Mr. Man, not conclusively. I agree with you that in the higher brackets, so to speak, men are superior to women. No woman, for instance, is as strong as Jack Dempsey. There has been no woman Shakespeare, no woman Edison, no woman Raphael, no female Chopin... About the only really creative work woman has done has been to produce man and, taking men by hand, that's nothing for her to be cheery about.

But when you get down to the common, or garden variety, of human beings it seems to me that women average up physically, mentally and morally pretty well with their husbands. True, we have no women prizefighters, but we have millions of women who have the strength to get away with eighteen-hour-a-day jobs, while their husbands and brothers consider themselves over-worked if they labor for six hours a day.

True, when women gather together over their tea the conversation is pretty piffing and mostly runs to personalities and diets and reducing and what little Johnny did and Little Mary said. But over their highballs don't men discuss their golf scores and the stock market and tell the stories they heard in the sleeper, rather than discourse about weighty policies of state or the last trend in literature?

And as for men playing the matrimonial game fairer than women and being just enough to stand by their bargains, oh, brother, brother, how can you? Isn't it the men who expect their wives to be both parlor ornaments and kitchen utensils; who expect their wives to keep perpetually young and beautiful; who expect their wives to cook and baby-tend and pinch pennies and still be able to dance the rhumba and look like a million dollars and be gay and glamorous, while a wife is satisfied if her husband is just a good provider and reasonably domestic? Isn't it middle-aged men who get divorced from their wives because they have got fat and grumpy-headed, but did you ever hear of a woman divorcing her husband because he developed a bay window and had got bald-headed?

Be fair, Mr. Man. Women have plenty of faults, but so have men. Both men and women were cut off the same bolt of cloth.

DOROTHY DIX.

DEAR MISS DIX—I have been married eight years. Have two children, a girl of six and a boy of two. My husband is sensible. Makes a fair living. Doesn't drink, gamble or flirt. Is devoted to the children. We have a nice home and he stays home most of the time. So far so good. But we are in financial difficulties. We have debts to pay off and we have to live on a strict budget. We have tried to tighten our belt, but we simply can't do it. At my first sign of carelessness my husband starts picking on me. He scolds me, insults me, calls me names and has got me miserable that I am seriously thinking of leaving him. The only thing that keeps me with him is the children. If not for these arguments we would have been as happy a couple as could be found, but when he begins insulting me I actually go crazy. Would you advise me to leave him?

THIRTY-ONE.

Answer: I would advise you to meet the situation with intelligence instead of hysterics. Why don't you use a little sense in solving your problem?

Why don't you say to yourself: I have a fault, a serious defect in my character, one that is about to ruin not only my life but the lives of my husband and children, and I am going to correct it. I am going to overcome it. I am not going to let the peace and happiness of my home be wrecked by my propensity for procrastination and my habit of strewing things about and never doing anything accurately."

You say you have tried to cure yourself of your carelessness, but you haven't tried hard enough. You haven't put your whole determination into it. You haven't brought every bit of will power you have to bear on it. You haven't used your brains in figuring out ways to outwit your personal devil and get the better of him.

You are like the drunkard who swears off drinking and then takes a glass to celebrate his good resolution. Or you are like the drug addict who indulges in a few shots on the sly when he is trying to break himself of the morphine habit. The only way to reform is to reform. Just to shut your teeth and say to yourself you will overcome a fault or die in the attempt.

You will commit a crime against your children if you deprive them of a good home and a good father because you resented his meddling for your sleepiness. When they ask you: "Mother, why haven't we any father like other children? Mother, why did you leave Father?" It will seem a mighty poor excuse when you have to tell them that it was because you wouldn't have dinner on time or sweep under the bed or put the top on the toothpaste tube.

And remember that when you try to support your children you will find that employers are not more tolerant or carious than your husband is, and that it will be just as much a bar to your success in business as it is to your success in matrimony.

Of course, nobody likes to be avoided, but if you will try to correct your carelessness your husband will be as pleased he will meet you halfway and try to encourage you, and you will get paid on the back instead of the hammer.

CHANGING ROCKS INTO A ROCKERY

Mignonettes Can Be Sown

Mignonettes can be safely sown outside now.

If they are to remain where they are sown, the beds should be given a slight sprinkling of soil to keep away slugs as soon as germination takes place.

For an early supply of the sweet-smelling little flower, the seed should have been sown in March, and the plants can be set out now. For this batch a sheltered position in an advantage.

Clean Out Nooks and Crannies and Open Up Others With Crowbar; Trees Are Not a Disadvantage

By QUERCUS ALBA

NO MATTER what type of garden that is to be made among natural rocks, the treatment of the rocks will be the same. It will be necessary to bring the rocks, which may be bare or covered with rank vegetation, into such shape that they will make homes for the choicest flowers of the mountains.

The first thing to do is to expose the surface of the rocks and clean out every nook and cranny, removing every kind of vegetation therein. This will not be found an easy task, for it is surprising how deep a wood root will penetrate into an almost imperceptible crack in a rock.

Some consideration must be given to the matter of felling trees where this is absolutely necessary. Most books on rock gardening will tell you that no tree should be within twenty feet or more of the rock garden. This may be the case in England, where the sunshine is not so great as it is here, but in and about Victoria a light shade of oak is not a disadvantage, provided there is no direct drip from the tree.

The fact is that when the most sun is needed, that is to say in the early spring, the trees are not yet in leaf and, therefore, cast very little shade; but later on when the sunshine gets brighter it has been the experience of the writer that most plants are grateful for a little shade in the heat of the day. One must be careful, however, not to allow the shade of evergreen trees to any extent.

If there happen to be a few stunted evergreen trees among the rocks, some of these may be left because they are always in keeping with an alpine setting.

WHERE PLANTS GROW

When the work of clearing and exposing the rocks has been done, the next step is to prepare receptacles for the soil in which the plants are to grow. These are made by opening up and developing natural fissures, by making new ones and by constructing pockets among the rocks.

This is done by the aid of the stone wall, the crow-bar, the cold chisel, and, in some cases, by powder. The latter should only be used by an experienced man.

It is quite impossible to say how and where pockets should be made, as every natural rock is quite different from its neighbor. So the builder will have to use his imagination and skill in the opening up of crevices and so on. One thing must be borne in mind, and that is to see that each and every pocket is drainable. That is, there must be no pocket in which the water can lie. It must be able to run away. This is exceedingly important as more plants are killed in the rock garden by bad drainage than by any other means. It is sometimes the case that a pocket may be made to drain by filling it up with concrete to a point where drainage will be come effective.

ROOT BORER—This is the caterpillar of a moth which bores within the roots of raspberries and loganberries, causing severe injury. The only remedy is to be continually on the watch for them and cut them out with a knife. This should be done in the fall and winter. A wire thrust into the bushes will account for most of them and keep the pest down. When there are only a few bushes involved the only alternative is to cover them with cheesecloth.

CANE MAGGOT—The young canes will bend over at the tip. This is caused by a maggot which girdles the cane from within. The only remedy is to cut out and burn infested shoots.

PEAR AND CHERRY SLUG—Black slug-like creature on the surface of the leaves are the larvae of a small sawfly. They may be destroyed by spraying with arsenate of lead or dusting with fresh ashes lime or a mixture of one pound of lead arsenate to sixteen pounds of ashed lime.

HOLLY LEAF MINER—The unsightly blotch on the holly leaves is caused by the maggot of a small black fly. The flies emerge from the leaves usually during the first week of May, but this season may be a little later. Eggs are deposited in the midrib of the leaves within a few days after the flies emerge and the blotch begins to be noticeable in August. The mine increases rapidly in size during the winter months. A fairly satisfactory means of controlling the flies is by dusting the hollies with nicotine and lime dust every three or four days after the flies begin to appear until the end of May. The method of making this dust was described in the previous article. Some success has been obtained by spraying frequently during the same period with whale oil soap and nicotine sulphate, which tends to drive the flies away.

LILAC LEAF MINER—This is the caterpillar of a very small moth which mines between the upper and lower surfaces of the leaves. Spray with nicotine sulphate 1% table-spoonfuls to one gallon of water as soon as the first sign of injury is seen and give a second application of two table-spoonfuls to a gallon two weeks later. Both sides of the foliage must be covered with the spray.

Cowbirds to the value of $277,944; calfskins, $117,441; and "harness leathers," $22,940, were used during 1933 by the Canadian miscellaneous leather goods industry, which includes harness, saddlery, trunks, bags, purses and belts. Other farm products in the shape of goatskins and pigskins were also used in smaller quantities.

Field Crops Increase Here

There is a noted tendency on the part of farmers on Vancouver Island to grow more field crops, as a feed for cattle now.

Officials in the field crop division of the Department of Agriculture report that they have received more inquiries regarding these crops this year than ever before.

The British Columbia Field Crop Union has already put out more tests this year than during the whole time last year.

Approach To Oak Bay Garden Is Example of Natural Landscaping

plot is different, especially on Vancouver Island, where there is so much rock. However, from the work of others, the gardener can get ideas which, after all, are very important.

IMPROVED ON NATURE

Mr. Spence has created his approach to his home in an artistic manner. In his landscape work he did not tear down the natural assets of the place—but, rather, improved upon them.

He saw the beauty in the oak tree, and his first object was to save it. He did not even destroy the broom. The bank was not removed—but braced with stones, and by "drawing out" the steps to the edge of the wall, the continuity of the slope was not broken.

The flowers have not been set according to any pattern. They cover the banks like weeds—a host of white violets under the trees which bloomed early in the spring—euphorbia, arabis, alyssum clinging to the stones, bordering the fence, and joining the bellflowers on the left side—and thousands of violets forming a purple border for the white concrete of the steps.

Let us step inside the gate to Mr. Spence's true garden behind the green fence. The long concrete slab, with their easy six-inch rise, make the steps.

He has to take into consideration the topography of his plot, and every embankment more like a path than a flight of steps.

MONASTERY GARDEN

Within, a curving cement pathway leads to the house over a bright green lawn. On the right is a large circular terrace, with a low wall surrounding a large holly bush. The pretty yellow flowers from Siberia have bloomed as many as four times a year in this country.

On the other side of the cement walk, an arbor or roses leads to the "monastery" garden. Mr. Spence calls it by this name because of the screen dividing it from the front part of the garden which has windows like those in a cloister. A lattice-work fence would be out of place here, but a wind-guard is needed, and the glass screen serves this purpose, he said.

Though the Spences raise no vegetables, they have used some plants which are usually relegated to the kitchen garden for decorative purposes. By the arbor is a clump of strawberry canes with a border of strawberries. The casual observer would hardly notice them, they fit into the picture so well. According to Mr. Spence, the strawberry is an ideal edging plant. First there is the green leaves, then the flowers, then the berries, and, in the fall, the lovely red leaves.

CEMENT WORK

But the feature of this home is the concrete work. Altogether fourteen tons of cement have been used to build the approach, terrace, walls, and paths, and all the work has been done by Mr. and Mrs. Spence.

The path from the gate is of red concrete with slabs of white 6x6x5 in the centre to guide the late-comer at night. The open porch in front is a patchwork of red and white tiles, while the terrace at the rear is a checker board of concrete.

The slabs and tiles for the garden are made by building a wooden frame to the depth and size wanted and filling it with concrete. The top is a levelled smooth. For colored concrete Mr. Spence fills the frame to within two inches of the top. The rest he fills with the color mixture made from color wash and cement and troweled smooth.

Mr. Spence prefers cement to gravel or sand paths because of the cleanliness. There is no chance of carrying any dirt into the house after walking over them. And cleanliness is a factor throughout the garden. There is not a weed on his whole plot, and not even a leaf of clover in his lawn.

Sun-loving Fruit and Needs Sandy Well-drained Loam; Double Kniffin System of Training Vine

By E. C. REID

Experimental Station, Saanichton

GRAPE growing dates back to the days that Aristotle, the Greek philosopher, was expounding his theories, or even before the Pharaohs of Egypt had started to plan their pyramids. In fact, its origin is lost in antiquity. When the tide of empire started its movement westward, many eastern customs were welcomed — perhaps too readily — by the developing civilizations. Historical data indicates that the grape and its products proved very popular in turns with the Greeks, the Romans, the Spaniards, the French, and even the stolid Briton relished its introduction. When America began its climb towards international recognition, the grape again played its part.

In eastern Canada and the United States selections of native grapes such as vitis labrusca, best meet the existing climatic requirements. In certain favored sections of the west, as California and our own southern interior, the sweeter European grape vitis vinifera can be grown successfully. For the most part, however, on the northern Pacific Coast generally, and Vancouver Island particularly, we have to be content with the varieties of American origin, such as the Concord, Campbell's Early, Moore's Early, and Island Belle.

Grape growing on Vancouver Island has received considerable impetus of late years following the efforts of the logberry growers in marketing their crop for wine purposes. The possibilities of the grape as a fruit crop, which has been attracting the attention of certain growers in Saanichton, and already a considerable acreage has been planted for this purpose. While experiments here would indicate that the logberry is possibly better adapted commercially for this purpose than is the grape in this country, it is felt, however, that certain results concerning the growing and training of grapes might be helpful to some at this time.

SANDY LOAM

As the grape is a sun-loving crop, care must be exercised in the selection of a suitable location for the vineyard. A southern or southeastern slope is preferable. The open porch in front is a patchwork of red and white tiles, while the terrace at the rear is a checker board of concrete. The planting distance recommended is ten feet apart each way. Deep planting is advocated and it is advisable to cut back to one or two buds. To encourage vigorous growth, thorough cultivation is recommended in the vineyard, particularly prior to bearing, about the fourth year. At the close of the fruit season, pruning should again be made back to one or two strong buds. During the second season, only two buds are permitted to grow, thus promoting sturdy growth. Before growth begins in the third year, it will be advisable to put down the permanent trellis to support the vines.

Most horticultural crops require considerable training and pruning, but possibly the grape demands more than any other crop, if economic results are to be forthcoming. There are different systems in vogue, but the ones most in use are the double and single Kniffin system.

DOUBLE KINNIFIN

At the Experimental Station the double Kniffin system of training has been found satisfactory. This consists in carrying one or two main trunks to the height of from three to five feet above the ground. When one main trunk is used, it is known as the single Kniffin system, while the double Kniffin system makes use of two main trunks. When using this system, the top wire should be five feet or more above ground, with the other wire about twenty inches lower. The disadvantage of the single Kniffin system is that two stories or series of canes arise, one above the other, and on a single trunk. As the terminal or upper growth is always the greater, the upper story soon dwarfs the lower, with a consequent reduction in yield taking place.

PLANT UP WINDOW BOXES, TUBS AND GARDEN VASES

CELERY—Plant out in May and June. For the winter supply the end of June is about the right time. To keep celery from going to seed it should not receive a check in any way; a steady and constant growth is essential.

TOMATOES

Do not be in a hurry to plant them out. The first week in June is soon enough. The disadvantage of the single Kniffin system is that two stories or series of canes arise, one above the other, and on a single trunk. As the terminal or upper growth is always the greater, the upper story soon dwarfs the lower, with a consequent reduction in yield taking place.

PHEASANTS

Make further sowings, and here, is where the trenches or drills would benefit by having a thorough soaking before the seeds are put in.

ROUBBLE SPROUTS

should be planted out as soon as the young plants are available.

APRICOTS

Apricots have not yet made much headway in the garden, but don't let that stop early spraying. Better flowers, fruits and vegetables will be had if the spray going is kept moist.

Ayrshire Herd For Boys' Farm

The authorities of the Prince of Wales Fairbridge Farm School, Cobble Hill, have decided their inauguration of a small herd entitled Ayrshire dairy herd as being most suitable for the children at the school.

The cattle taken over from the Pemberton farm have been added to by purchase from Adam Gordon, of Cobble Hill, and by the acquisition of two more accredited animals, a bull and a cow, from the Royal, B.C., as well as a six-month-old Ayrshire bull, a son of "Reprint," from the same herd. It proposed gradually to increase the herd as the school develops.

Tulips

Breaking in Flower's Color Caused by Virus; Disease Infectious

By W. R. FOSTER
Assistant Provincial Plant Pathologist

BREAKING" in tulips, like infantile paralysis, is caused by a virus. The virus, an infectious principle is responsible for self-colored tulips becoming striped or splashed. This change is called "breaking" and the flower is termed "broken," while the original form is known as a breeder.

Once broken, an individual bulb remains broken and all the offsets from it also become broken. "Breaking" in tulips is usually caused by aphids. When breaking occurs there is usually a slight but definite reduction in the size of the flower, in the height of the stem, and in the general vigor of the plant. Broken tulips increase less freely, hence the term breeder which the old florists applied to the broken forms.

"Breaking" is not common among the early varieties, though certain examples are well known, e.g. Do Wet is a broken form of Prince of Austria. Among the cottage tulips breaking is general, though it is rarely recognized in the self-yellow and white. Breaking is usually less common among the Darwins, the broken forms are now given a class to themselves and are called "Rembrandts."

Broke flowers should be grown apart and not in close proximity to self-colored tulips. If broken tulips appear among self-colored tulips they should be removed, with bulb and destroyed.

CLIMATE FOR SUGAR BEETS

From the data collected during the past twenty years by the Chemistry Division of the Dominion Experimental Farms, a good general idea of where sugar beets can be grown successfully has been obtained. Of the two main factors considered, namely soil classification and climatic conditions, the latter appears to be the determining factor for both yield and sugar content.

A cool wet spring prevents seed germination, and a poor stand is the result. A hot, dry summer retards growth, giving small roots and a low yield, and a cold, dull autumn, often with frost before harvesting, prevents the proper maturing of the beets at a time when sugar formation is taking place.

The ideal seasonal conditions are a warm spring with sufficient precipitation to ensure good seed germination, a growing season with plenty of rain and a mild open autumn with considerable sunshine. These conditions vary every year and explain why one district produces good beets of high sugar content one year and beets of poor quality the next.

A dark loamy soil seems to be best for sugar beet growing. Beets are very susceptible to soil acidity and liming of the soil is necessary. It is now recognized that best results are obtained by the use of phosphoric acid seems to be the most important element.

As with other crops, the surface soil of the root bed should be kept loose by frequent shallow hoeing or raking. This practice not only keeps down weeds, but allows the air to enter the soil and conserves moisture.

during the past season. It is advisable to cut this back to two buds. These will supply the shoots for the succeeding year. This short branch is called a spur, developing from year to year into a stubby branch. As this occurs the grower must endeavor to bring out new canes which spring from the main stem. In pruning care must be taken that this is done when the vine is dormant, otherwise bleeding and a certain loss of vigor may follow.

G.J.D.'s Music Column

MUSIC TEACHERS' FEDERATIONS

FOR A NUMBER of years music teachers have, in the interest of the art, banded together in western provinces, from Manitoba to the Pacific Coast. About fifteen years ago at Vancouver, the B.C. Music Teachers' Federation came into existence, and in about a third of that period the Victoria Music Teachers' Federation was organized.

ITS SPREADING BRANCHES

DURING THE past twelve months more than ever before an unusual interest has been shown in the Federation throughout the province, and several branches have been established at Kamloops, Penticton, Kimberley, Prince Rupert, Chilliwack, with inquiries regarding establishments from Smithers, Nelson, Nanaimo, Courtenay and Cumberland. These centres are tributaries to the main centre of the B.C. Music Teachers' Federation at Vancouver, each centre now adjusting itself and working under this title, using the term "local branch," as, for instance, the B.C.M.T.F. group, as the Victoria branch.

Identified with the movement at Vancouver is its president, Roy Robertson, who has been active to its cause since its inception. Others who assisted in its early life were the late Mrs. Coulthard and the late Charles Holroyd Paul.

In the Victoria Branch, Dr. J. H. Watson, its first president; Reginald Cox, its present president; Mrs. Marion McGovern, vice-president; Mrs. Sherwood, Mrs. Pegeat-Moller; Beatrice Griffen, Gwendoline Harper, Mrs. W. K. Jameson, Oliver R. Stout, Stanley Bulley and George J. Dyke, have been prominent with its growth and progress.

CHIEF OBJECTS

THE OBJECTS of these musical groups are the advancement of the profession generally, with especial regards to its ethical side; the promulgation of music in the public and high schools; in assisting the work of the local Musical Festival Associations; and especially in fighting for music as an optional subject on the Junior matriculation course; the important establishment of a Chair of Music at the University of British Columbia; and in reviewing the existing musical examinations by outside bodies such as the Associated Board, Trinity College of England, the Toronto Conservatory, and McGill exams. Significantly, a communication has been sent out from the headquarters on the mainland to all the different provincial local branches, asking for "an opinion on the establishment of an examining board at the U.B.C. in the event of music being listed on the junior matriculation course as an optional subject, or of accepting the examinations of outside bodies." In a nutshell—if music is accepted by the U.B.C. as an optional subject for junior matric, all students may study music and use the credits for entrance to the university, and it is felt that this would be a tremendous boon to music students and music teachers. It is understood here that committees from the faculty of the U.B.C. and the B.C. Teachers' Federation are now working on this problem. In the meantime, while some local branches have sent in their opinions, other centres now in process of formation are expected to share in these opinions and strengthen the hands of the federation at headquarters. Particularly will this apply to the contemplated petition of a Music Teachers' Act to be presented at some future date to the Provincial House of Assembly.

SASKATCHEWAN HAS CHAIR OF MUSIC

IN THE province of Saskatchewan music is already an optional subject for junior matric, and it university can boast a chair of music, with Dr. Collingwood at its head. At the moment there is a feeling that "A standard of music be adopted for all western Canada incorporated with the idea of the establishment of a chair at the U.B.C." Vancouver and Victoria branches are inclined in this direction to make a beginning, and are now canvassing their memberships. Each province naturally would control its own music syllabus.

WILL CANADA CONTROL ITS OWN MUSICAL EXAMS?

IT IS FELT generally that the time has arrived for musical Canada "to stand on its own feet" with regard to examinations in music, and it has already been hinted that in the event of this course being pursued and that the standard is at least as high as the one that has for so many years been set, one of the leading music institutions of London is prepared to discontinue its yearly theoretical and practical examinations at centres where such examinations by the departments of education are operated and sponsored.

These are not easy matters to adjust to suit all concerned. Manitoba seems inclined at present to hold its own exams for school optionals, and it must not be forgotten that parents must become familiar with these important new features in the education lives of their children.

The Way Beyond

By JEFFERY FARROW

"I called you a liar, Valentine." "Yes, I heard . . . And you see Rosemary fully believes you did the killing—"

"Ah!" sighed Richard. "But why . . . and how do you know this?" "Because she told me as much."

"Open . . . you have seen her . . . recently?"

"I have enjoyed that relish. In time to come I expect to see a great deal more of her—I am living . . . hoping to make her my Countess."

"Never!" cried Richard fiercely. "I'll see you dead first!"

"Oh no, no!" murmured the Earl, smoothing his ruffled hat, "you would not see me dead because you would be as dead as I—it is a dust you are threatening."

"Of course . . . yes," groaned Richard, closing his eyes to the pain of his throbbing head.

"I'm glad to be assured of this," nodded his lordship, turning back to the room. "I'll send word to Rosemary to pray me. And we have no fancy to die like the late Earl . . . killed like a mad dog. Vibart—not that way will you please."

"Ah . . . what the devil do you suggest?"

"The answer, my dear fellow, is Adeiu, a perfumed liar, Abeymore." The Earl, putting on his hat before the mirror, smiled at his reflection quite happily.

"It will be a strange fate, Richard, and if you and I that were children together and playfully now should grow up merely to slaughter each other!"

"This rests with yourself, Valentine. Continue . . . your attentions to Miss Cynthia Bellenden and—"

"Iniquitous . . . presumptuous fool," exclaimed Richard, leaning himself out of his chair with such violence that he staggered, tripped and fell heavily.

"Dick!" cried the Earl in quick concern, and stooped to help him, but with a pained gesture. Richard spurned this proffered help and contrived to get himself back into the chair unaided.

"Now, now!" quoth the Earl, re-provoking. "Be calm I beg. Sit still awhile, for you are in no fit state to pummel me at present, so do restrain yourself . . . or perhaps I had better remove this invitation that is me . . . I'll be off."

"Valentine," said Richard, leaning slightly across the table. "Keep your hands from Rosemary. Cease your devilish persecution!"

"Richard," said the Earl, turning lightly towards the street door, "you should know me well enough to be very certain no threats can ever deter me, so—why waste your breath."

"Well! Goodbye for the present!"

"And, how do you know this?"

"Because she told me as much."

Slot Machines Now $200,000,000 Business; Profits Run Up to $75 a Week Per Machine

By WILLIE THORNTON

CHICAGO.

THE NEXT time you send one of your pennies, nickels, dimes, or quarters tinkling down the slot of a coin machine, think this to yourself.

"Well, that is part of my contribution to a vast total of at least $200,000,000 a year (maybe as much as $500,000,000) that goes into coin machines, helping to build up what will soon be a major industry."

If it is a "pin game table" that gets your nickel to play this elaborate version of "bagatelle," or mechanical marbles, say to yourself:

"I am one of 12,000,000 coin-droppers who are watching the meandering marble this week, pretty near as many as go to the movies, and a lot more than go to baseball and other such mass games."

When you look at the shiny new "pin table" with its modernistic lighting, flashing lights, tiny gadgets and gewgaws, or at the shiny "bell" or "jackpot" machine, or the peanut or gum or weighing machine that gets your coin, reflect to yourself:

"There are between eighty and 100 manufacturers building these things, and they made around $15,000,000 worth of them last year."

IT IS BIG BUSINESS NOW

That will give you some idea of what is behind the tinkle of every coin you drop into a machine slot. The thing that has been for years best known to the public as "the slot machine racket" is turning into a more or less respectable "big business."

Probably not more than 10 per cent of the production of this "depression" industry consists to-day of the traditional "bell" or jackpot gambling machines, which are under fire in so many states and communities.

Interest is shifting to the "pin table" games, in which a marble is shot to the top of an inclined board and dribbles down among hazards to drop into "scoring holes."

Production of straight merchandising machines is increasing to the point where they are an important factor in national sales of cigarettes, gum, soap, peanuts, and now even of pin and portrait photographs. A device to sell accident insurance policies and perhaps other forms of insurance through coin machines is being perfected.

One single operator of merchandising machines to-day controls 75,000 such mechanical outlets. From this fact you get the idea: a lot of merchandise is beginning to be sold while only about 8,000 people work in plants building coin machines, these are largely assembly plants and there are probably 10,000 more making wooden and metal cases, castings, batteries, locks, parts and accessories.

At least 50,000 men (and, of late, women) are working at "operating"

The tinkle of the coin, the whirr of the wheels, the clinking of the reels and the (hoped-for) shower of the "jackpot" . . . From these came the appeal of the "Bell," "Slot" or "Jackpot" machines shown above. Known also as "Revolvers," these gambling machines led to huge profits, robbing, hi-jacking, murder; brought a wave of public indignation that is now at its height.

Yet at the same time, a growing volume of pennies, nickels, and dimes pours into vending machines . . . Hands poised expectantly for the gum, peanuts, hand lotion, perfume, cigarettes, or candy . . . Eyes watch the trembling needle of a scale . . . Ears await the music of a dance band . . . all perfectly legal and above-board, but part of the same phenomenal coin-maching industry that rose on the "Jackpot" machines.

These machines, that is, setting them up in stores, servicing them, keeping them full of merchandise or slug, job during the depression created his own job by setting up a string of these machines with his savings.

IN 2,000,000 SPOTS

And "so something like 2,000,000 'locations,' cigar stores, pawnshops, hotel and theatre lobbies, 'sport-lands' (to-day's name for a penny arcade), small groceries and delicatessens, taverns, bars, garages, filling stations, clubs, and even private homes, are to-day housing from one to fifty coin machines, varying from the widely attested 'jackpot' machine to the innocent contrivance that delivers a handful of salted peanuts or your more or less correct weight for every penny dropped therein."

Manufacturers in Chicago, where 75 per cent of the machines are made, declare that thousands of small merchants have actually been saved from the Big Bad Wolf during the lean years by the proceeds from these machines placed in their stores.

When you drop a nickel for a handful of peanuts, nearly a cent of the quarter or nickel you play in stays with the proprietor. As machines, depending on style and location, take in anywhere from $4 to $75 or more a week, you can see that to many a store owner, his "end" of that stream of coins means the difference between going on and going up.

For years, as far as the public was concerned, the coin machine business has been just "the slot machine racket." But now it has been smitten with an itch for respectability.

Along came NRA, and the manufacturers organized into a trade association, the National Association of Coin Operated Machine Manufacturers, with a code authority and a full complement of resolutions, rulings, and dissensions.

One of the principal reasons "slot machines" and legitimate coin devices must be considered together is that the same manufacturer, in many cases, build both, and the same code authorities govern them.

State and local associations of "operators" have been organized, in an effort to raise standards in the business and out the chisel and racketeer.

Five fat trade journals clamor for "ethics," and discuss the legal and moral pitfalls of coin machines.

Strenuous efforts are being made to hoist "the slot machine" from low public esteem into a respectability befitting a $200,000,000 industry.

neighbors discussed hotly the rights and wrongs of a neutral country when others are at war. Few went so far as to suggest actual and immediate war. But there were fewer neutrals in America after May 7, 1915.

Three days later, President Wilson made his famous speech in which he said "There is such a thing as a nation being so right that it does not need to convince others by force that it is right."

To this shining standard, few rallied. The public demand was plainly for more drastic action than the series of notes that throughout the summer passed between America and Germany.

As these grew increasingly severe, the pacifist Bryan, Secretary of State, resigned, saying: "Why should an American citizen be permitted to involve his country in war by traveling in a belligerent ship, when he knows that ship will pass through a danger zone? . . . It is a very one-sided citizenship that compels a government to go to war over a citizen's rights and yet relieve the citizen of all obligations to consider his nation's welfare."

For such views and for resigning his office to maintain them, Bryan was vilified as a "unpleasant traitor." But they are views that are getting the most careful study to-day. Diplomats and statesmen study the possible means of redefining neutrality so that it becomes really possible.

The Lusitania, we know now, was unarmed, and carried no troops, despite German contentions at the time. But we also know that she carried 4,200 cases of rifle cartridges and other military supplies destined for the allied troops. This was quite legal at the time. Was it wise to back up neutrals who sailed on such a ship?

Twenty years later, munitions committee members and state department diplomats are wondering.

"To be sure," mumbled Mr. Clipsey, "you treated me rather roughly last time we met, you also snubbed me . . . and as a creasy spy—"

"Hello—Hello! Is there anyone else?"

"Somebody's warty full o' noes or—right!" quoth Mr. Shrig in placid surmises. "And 'the Gimlet' not here! Go on, pal Dick, and leave the door ajar."

"Away strode the gigantic Corporal forthwith into the tap-room and was there instantly accosted by that same agitated voice, and one that now stood drooping limberly before him, the glass o' the river, or street, water—alley, garage or cellar, ginned a wood o' dooey morning or sunset."

"What's this?" asked Mr. Shrig, up-ending the glass that Richard had just emptied. "This here is my pal an' partner Corporal Richard Roe, late o' the grandees."

"What's this?" said the voice. "I know it well. I found it in the kennel . . . the gutter close by . . . and blood near it . . . splashes of blood! Tell me, is the owner here?"

"He was my father's cousin,"

"Think o' that!" quoth Mr. Shrig, in a kind of exultation, shaking Richard's hand with the upmost heartiness and beaming more jovially than ever
